No idle threat: switch off to beat pollution

VOLUNTEERS will be sent to patrol busy roads in Hammersmith – encouraging drivers to switch off their engines while stuck in traffic.

Trained advisers have been instructed to warn drivers about the environmental damage caused by idling while stuck in long queues.

The Mayor of London's office said volunteers would go out on days when high pollution levels were forecast to encourage drivers to "do their bit" for the environment.

The 'idling engine action days' are among several new clean air initiatives being introduced to tackle pollution in the borough.

Other schemes that will be launched in Hammersmith and Fulham under the mayor's £20 million air quality fund include creating a cycle bypass on Putney Bridge Approach and working with construction companies to reduce emissions.

Chef's roll of honour

A HAMMERSMITH chef has been recognised as the best in the business for his unusual sausage rolls.

Philip Harrison, head chef of the Anglesea Arms in Wingate Road, beat 19 other rivals to claim the Great Sausage Roll Off title at the Red Lion pub in Barnes.

Expert judges, including Masterchef finalist Emma Spitzer, were particularly impressed by Mr Harrison's pheasant and black pudding roll – one of 10 inventive creations he cooked up on the day.

It was third time lucky for the Brackenbury Village chef, who had twice before fallen at the final hurdle in his pursuit of the crown.

"Each of the three years I have entered I just try to make something fun and special," he said. "This is the first time I have won but it hopefully won't be the last."

Grove Centre fete

THE Grove Neighbourhood Centre in Hammersmith runs its annual spring fete on Saturday, March 19.

Stalls selling jewellery, clothes, books and bric-a-brac, as well as traditional games and a raffle, will be among the entertainment on offer. The event is taking place at the centre in Bradmore Park Road between 1pm and 3pm. Entry is £2 for adults and £1 for seniors, with children going free. All proceeds will go towards the centre, which provides space for several different community groups.

Mayor backs Tottenham's new goal

THE Mayor of London Boris Johnson has given final approval for the £400 million development of Tottenham Hotspur's new White Hart Lane football stadium.

The North London club's revised plans will see a new 61,000-seater stadium built on the site of their current home and features a retractable pitch to host not only football, but two American Football games a season. The stadium, which has a current capacity of 36,000, will also host other international sports events and concerts.

Tottenham's ambitious plans also include new public space to host dedicated events programmes, a 180-bed hotel, sports and health centre and the Grade II listed Warmington House will be transformed into an interactive club museum. There will also be 585 new homes built on the site with a minimum of £48.4 million secured from the residential development towards the White Hart Lane stadium improvements.

Londoners will also benefit from

FROM

a 'sky walk' attraction, which will allow visitors to climb the exterior of the south stand allowing views across the capital.

The improvements to White Hart Lane are at the epicentre of the mayor's ongoing regeneration of Tottenham. City Hall has invested £28 million from the Mayor's Regeneration Fund and the London Enterprise Panel to regenerate the area, which includes investment to rejuvenate Tottenham High Road, to deliver new highways and parking improvements, upgrades to Tottenham Hale station and investment in employment and training support.

Haringey council gave outline planning permission for the redevelopment plans in December and now the mayor has given his seal of approval, which it's hoped will now put the club on track to complete the works in time to move back into the stadium for the start of the 2018/19 season.

Mr Johnson MP, said: "White Hart Lane is already an iconic stadium, steeped in history, and the new venue will not only almost double its capacity, but provide world-class facilities to watch Premier League football, international sports events and concerts in the heart of the capital.

"The stadium will also be the focal point of a major drive to regenerate Tottenham, breathing new life into the area, creating jobs and boosting growth."

Daniel Levy, Chairman of Tottenham Hotspur FC, said: "This marks

yet another major milestone for this vital and complex scheme and we are grateful to the mayor for his ongoing support.

"We remain focused on completing the final stages of the planning process.

"This new scheme carries enormous public benefits and will play a key role in kick-starting place change, bringing exceptional opportunities for the local community and wider stakeholders.

"We are proud to be part of this important step forward for an area that has been our home for more than 130 years and where we shall continue to live and play our part."

Haringey council leader Claire Kober said: "The redevelopment of White Hart Lane and our work to bring new jobs and homes to Tottenham will improve the quality of life for thousands of our residents.

"The new stadium will put Haringey on the international stage with Premier League football and NFL games being broadcast around the world helping to attract further investment and significantly boosting business opportunities."

The £28 million Mayor of London funding includes:

■ £2.5 million for the Growth on the High Road Project to rejuvenate Tottenham High Road

■ £900,000 to invest in employment and training support

■ £3.6million to transform the Enterprise Centre at 639 Tottenham High Road, including provision for training and skills

■ £18million for North Tottenham, including £3.5 million to deliver new highways and parking improvements, £2.5 million investment in a District Energy Network, £8.5 million to transform the High Road west area adjacent to the new Tottenham Hotspur Stadium and £3.5 million investment in Tottenham Hale Station (plus £9million of funding from the council)

■ £3 million for an Opportunity Investment Fund to invest in key sites on the High Street, informed by the findings of the Tottenham Physical Development framework.

NEWS FROM HAMMERSMITH

■ LENDING A HAND: Labour mayoral candidate Sadiq Khan showed his support for hospital campaigners during a visit to Hammersmith last week. Mr Khan met supporters of the 'Save Our Hospitals' campaign, backing calls for accident and emergency services to be protected from NHS cuts. Campaigners were also joined by local MP Andy Slaughter and council leader Stephen Cowan ahead of a public meeting on the future of the borough's hospitals. Figures revealed in last week's Chronicle pointed to a sharp rise in the number of people using the A&E department at Charing Cross Hospital last year

Bid to help planners protect schools from fast food takeaways

BY JACK DIXON
jack@londonweeklynews.co.uk

TOWN Hall planners should be given tougher powers to stop fast food chains opening new restaurants close to Hammersmith's schools, lobby groups have warned.

Ministers are being urged to make sure the fight against childhood obesity is not undone by tempting takeaways on the school run.

More than £2 million of public money was invested in healthy eating initiatives for under-18s in Hammersmith and Fulham last year.

But local authority lobbyists and medical professionals are now warning that the prevalence of fast food outlets remains a major risk to young people's health.

Teresa O'Neill, health spokeswoman for London Councils, which represents the capital's 32 local authorities, called for swift action to reduce childhood obesity levels and warned: "The health and well-being of London's children is at stake."

Under the current rules, council planners in Hammersmith and Fulham can block applications for new hot food takeaways if they are within 400 metres of areas where children are likely to congregate, including schools, youth centres and parks. But Ms O'Neill said greater powers were needed to prevent schools being surrounded by fast food chains.

"Boroughs are already using existing planning powers to regulate the number of fast food outlets near schools, along high streets and town centres, and they are sharing best practice to ensure that planning decisions are made in the right places for the right reasons."

"Giving boroughs more clout in the planning system to prioritise public health will allow us to create a healthier environment for London's children and young people, which when combined with other initiatives will have a significant impact on childhood obesity rates in the capital."

The call was echoed by the British Medical Association, whose recent 'Food for Thought' report found that takeaway restaurants were often concentrated around schools.

A spokesman said: "The spread of fast food restaurants – many of which are located in city centres, in areas of deprivation, and in close proximity to schools – means eating fast food has become a normal, everyday occurrence for children and young people because it is so readily available."

"As these premises can often be opened without applying for planning permission, one useful step is to provide local authorities with the powers to limit the future number, clustering and over-concentration of fast food outlets locally."

Last year Hammersmith and Fulham council invested £2.5 million in a series of new services designed to encourage healthy eating and boost physical activity among children and young people. The programme is also offering families nutritional advice, including interactive supermarket tours, to promote healthy food choices.

The latest calls for action on childhood obesity follow research published in January suggesting Fulham residents are among the least likely in the UK to visit the gym on a regular basis.

Councillor Vivienne Lukey, Hammersmith and Fulham council's cabinet member for health and adult social care, said: "We are determined to tackle childhood obesity by helping local families to eat well and be more active."

"That's why we've invested heavily in programmes offering opportunities and fun activities that promote healthier lifestyles as part of our Tackling Childhood Obesity strategy."

"We also have a planning policy in place which allows us to restrict the use of businesses for fast food outlets if they are too close to schools, parks or other places where children gather."

Meals on wheels to cost less

THE cost of 'meals on wheels' for elderly residents in Hammersmith will be reduced by a third this year despite cuts of more than £5 million to the adult social care budget, council bosses have announced.

Those who benefit from the service will now pay £2 for a hot meal to be delivered to their door.

It means that charges for 'meals on wheels' have been slashed by more than half over the last two years.

The reduction was included in Hammersmith and Fulham council's budget for the next financial year, which was agreed last week.

Council leader Stephen Cowan said: "By reviewing where every penny of taxpayers' money is spent and stripping out waste, we have been able to slash meals on wheels charges by a further third."

"Despite government cuts, we have still been able to deliver better value for residents. We have cut over £600,000 from the salaries of senior officials and our zero-based budget reviews mean we will continue to find savings that do not reduce services to residents."

The 'meals on wheels' service delivers cooked meals to elderly residents who cannot cook for themselves due to mobility difficulties or disabilities.

The council says it costs more than £7 to prepare each meal but from April residents will pay less than half that amount for the service.

The reduction in charges comes despite a cut of £5.3 million to the council's adult social care budget for 2016/17.

Further cuts of around £3.2 million to children's services and £2.8 million to environmental services were also announced, as part of plans to make savings of more than £15.4 million over the next financial year.

The budget also included a freeze on the borough's share of the council tax charge.

Councillor Greg Smith, leader of the Conservative group, described the plan as a "budget of broken promises" and called for the council to work more closely with neighbouring authorities to make further savings.

He said: "Labour in Hammersmith and Fulham should start working constructively with our tri- and bi-borough partners to secure more savings from shared services. When the Conservatives left office, these savings had reached £44 million a year with a target of £100 million a year. Labour's partisan approach to tri- and bi-borough has done nothing to realise this."

■ RIGHT TRACK: A network of community organisations has been set up to help young people in Hammersmith and Fulham get the best start in life. The new 'Partnership for Young People', set up by Hammersmith and Fulham council, includes representatives from schools, youth groups, local businesses, sports clubs and arts organisations. The partnership was launched at the Lyric Theatre in Hammersmith with an event hosted by Rahima Begum, the local youth parliament member, and Darnell Christie, her deputy. Cheyenne Buchannan-Bates (pictured), a Year 10 design student at Fulham Cross Girls School, won a competition to design the partnership's new logo.

NEWS FROM WESTMINSTER AND PIMLICO

■ KEY ROLE: Gary Lashko is the Royal Hospital Chelsea's new chief executive

Hospital's new chief

THE Royal Hospital Chelsea has named Gary Lashko as its new chief executive officer.

Mr Lashko was community services director at CHS Group, a charitable housing association, in Cambridge since August 2011, and joined the Royal Hospital at the beginning of February this year.

The Governor of the Royal Hospital, General Sir Redmond Watt, said of the new appointment: "After a comprehensive search process, I am very pleased to welcome Gary to the Royal Hospital Chelsea. His background is in care and he has a strong track record in leadership.

"He is very well qualified to ensure that we continue to take excellent care of our Chelsea Pensioners."

Mr Lashko said: "I am honoured to have been selected as the new chief executive officer of the Royal Hospital. As one of Britain's most treasured institutions and an example model of care for the elderly; I am committed to preserving and contributing to the historic home of the Chelsea Pensioners.

"I am looking forward to working with all at the Royal Hospital and hope to continue and drive forward its strategies for the future."

Council hopes tax will be lowest again

WESTMINSTER City Council's Cabinet has agreed the authority's proposed budget and council tax for 2016/17.

The council says it needs to find more than £100million in savings over the next three years, on top of the £90million it has delivered over the past three years.

A council spokesman said: "Continuing reductions in government funding, changes in national legislation and increasing demands on services have led to ongoing pressures on the council's finances. Most of these savings have been achieved through extensive efficiency programmes, continuously examining every way of reducing costs and, when appropriate, increasing income.

"Westminster's Council Tax is the lowest in the country and has been the same for nine years. If it had been raised each year just to keep in line with inflation, the average band D resident would now be paying £90 more. Therefore, a modest increase has been agreed by Cabinet for 2016/17 of just £15.07 extra a year for a Band D resident, equivalent to 29p per week."

This will be subject to final approval by the full council on Wednesday, March 2.

While Westminster's Band D will be £392.81 per resident, the council will be spending over £760 per resident on adults' and children's services alone – almost twice as much as Westminster receives from the whole of the council tax.

Despite the financial challenges, the Cabinet outlined how the budget for 2016/17 also sets out how £815million will be spent on council services in the next financial year to deliver the council's vision of a City for All.

Councillor Tim Mitchell, cabinet member for finance and corporate services, said: "We're always focused on offering our residents value for money. We have deliberately kept council tax low for nine years. We chose to do this because we wanted to help the economy and local residents during difficult times as the country has been tackling the deficit. As we now see a stronger economy, like many other councils, we feel the time is right to look at a very modest increase in council tax, which is already the lowest around. We feel this is right to make sure we can ensure the city's continued success and offer the right support for the most vulnerable."

The Cabinet has approved the budget and council tax report at its meeting on February 22.

The proposed increase for the Westminster element of the council tax will be made up of 1.99 per cent, plus two per cent for social care. This is subject to approval by full council.

The council said: "Our 2015/16 council tax was significantly lower than both the average London and national council tax levels of £1,298 and £1,484 respectively. Even after Cabinet's decision, Westminster's council tax is expected to remain the lowest in the country."

Writing for you every week, London's most outspoken entrepreneur Charlie pipes up!

I 'VE been called a few things in my time, but, according to last week's Sun newspaper, the latest is a 'rough diamond' – a label I'm quite happy to take in the context of what I've achieved in my business career.

According to International Development Secretary Justine Greening, the country needs more of these 'rough diamonds' to support the UK's economic growth.

It's a statement I can't disagree with. In fact, it's common sense, but the challenge is to not only dig up the diamonds, but give them a chance to shine.

The Sun's article highlighted a group of business 'rough diamonds', which, along with me, included people such as Michelle Mone, Duncan Bannatyne, Bernie Ecclestone and Jo Malone. The common denominator across these guys in particular is that, between us we do not have one O-level, GCSE or any other piece of paper with a qualification on it.

We all made our way in the world without the need or requirement for qualifications. We learnt on the job, be that the trade in which we have succeeded or through acquired business skills to make sure we make and not lose money, and, most importantly draw on our entrepreneurial acumen to earn ourselves a living and create jobs for others to do just the same.

While this all sounds very romantic, this was, in many cases done out of necessity. It could be to help break away from a poor background or to provide a young family with bread and shoes. Either way, there was often a motivation that gave an added push to success.

That said, sometimes it's just unbridled entrepreneurial desire that drives us on, no matter what our background.

Of course, the entrepreneurs I'm talking about are the product of a very different education system to the one we have today. We weren't even part of the 'university at all costs' generation, but instead we finished school with or without qualifications and plunged headlong into the job market.

The world is now a very different place, but one that is still blighted by the hangover of being a university-driven society. Perhaps one of the only plus-points of the last recession was that it has made young people think twice about going on to Higher Education to take some meaningless course, but instead get themselves job-ready for an increasingly competitive job market.

Our current education system also makes sure that kids leave school with at least some qualifications, which of course is the right thing to do, but has the danger of creating a learning conveyor belt that potentially drives the rough diamonds towards the comfortable conformity. Why take the risk of being a jewel in the crown, when you could do OK as a cubic zirconia?

So, in today's modern world, how do we make sure the next generation of rough diamonds don't remain buried? I think apprenticeships have a huge part to play. They give the qualifications that the education system is desperate to bestow, but more importantly they provide the on-the-job experience that's so vital to young people and employers.

Apprenticeships also provide the best opportunity for young people to decide if they want to take the skilled-employee route or set sail on their own voyage armed with the skills and experience they gained as a trainee.

Ms Greening also said in her speech at the Centre for Social Justice that it's not just about businesses providing apprenticeships. And again, she's right. It's about using apprenticeships as a platform to allow young people to express themselves, make the most of their personalities and channel their drive and determination. It's exactly what I and my fellow 'rough diamonds' did all those years ago.

Just because the education system is different it doesn't mean the country will become bereft of rough diamond entrepreneurs. If we nurture them, they will surely shine.

LONDON WIDE

Borwick and Boris unite to lead London out of Europe

BY GEOFF BAKER
geoff@londonweeklynews.co.uk

KENSINGTON'S MP Victoria Borwick has teamed up with her old friend Boris Johnson to lead the London campaign for Britain to break away from the EU.

Lady Borwick, who was deputy to the Mayor of London from 2012 until her election to Parliament last year, is backing the Out campaign because she believes that Britain's annual hand out of £18,250,000,000 to the EU should go to the nation's poor and the NHS instead.

The Conservative MP and Kensington and Chelsea councillor for the Abingdon ward, who has long campaigned for bolstering the NHS and ending health inequalities in Kensington, says she wants the UK to leave Europe in order to better care for the needy at home.

"Britain sends £50 million a day of British taxpayer's money to Brussels. I believe that this money would be better spent on tackling poverty in Britain, on additional funding for our NHS and supporting the most vulnerable in our country," said Lady Borwick.

"I believe in localism – local people deciding where their money is spent and decisions being made as close to voters as is logical. I do not believe this can be achieved by handing the purse strings and decision making to the EU."

The loss of support from two of London's highest-profile and most influential figures will be a blow to Prime Minister David Cameron's increasingly-feverish campaign for Britain to stay in Europe, although Lady Borwick's and Boris Johnson's vote is against the trend of the capital's political heavyweights.

Among the front runner candidates to replace Mr Johnson as Mayor of London in the May election, only Zac Goldsmith, the Conservative candidate, and the Respect Party's George Galloway are campaigning for Britain to quit the European Union.

The Labour candidate, Sadiq Khan, the Lib Dem's Caroline Pidgeon and the Green Party's Sian Berry are all for staying in the EU – as is the London Assembly.

Mr Khan announced last week: "The EU brings huge cultural, social, economic benefits for London. Leaving the EU is taking a risk and thousands of our jobs will be put in danger – 60 per cent of west London companies have London headquarters. We risk not only our jobs, but our growth."

Ms Berry said it was "so important for London" to remain in the EU.

She added: "If you think about the number of people you have living and working here and helping to run businesses who are from the EU and how successful the open policy on migration has been for London, it would be so wrong to go back on that now."

"London has become such a success story in that respect. I'm in favour of being in the EU and I have very warm feelings towards the rest of Europe, I like the way different countries work together."

Last week the London Assembly also voted to remain

■ WE WANT OUT: MPs Lady Borwick and Boris Johnson

part of Europe, citing exports, jobs, the environment and fear of Islamist terrorism as reasons to stay.

In an "urgent motion", the Assembly backed the Prime Minister and warned that leaving the union would be "financially devastating" for the capital.

In proposing the motion and opposing Mayor Johnson, Len Duvall, the Assembly Labour member for Greenwich, said: "Membership of the EU is incredibly important for London's economic growth and employment prospects. We need the mayor to take seriously the concerns of organisations like London First and the City who have warned that London would be diminished outside the EU, and that the result could be billions of pounds and tens of thousands of jobs wiped off the capital's books.

"Of course the EU is not perfect, but that shouldn't mean that we turn our back and run into the unknown, that could be a disaster."

Stephen Knight, the Lib Dem member who jointly seconded the motion with Green member Darren Johnson, said: "London is the de facto capital of Europe and its economy hugely benefits from EU membership in increased trade and investment as well as the free movement of people that enables London to be an international city."

"The EU is also driving forward vital environmental improvements, especially in air quality. By being a member of the EU London has benefitted from very low borrowing costs for vital infrastructure projects such as Crossrail and upgrades to the Tube. Anyone who really wants to put the interests of London first would recognise that it would be foolish in the extreme to walk away from these immense benefits of EU membership."

The Assembly noted that the jobs of half a million Londoners were linked to the EU and that the capital would be at greater risk to terrorism if the UK pulled out.

The Assembly claimed: "Analysis conducted by the Centre for Economics and Business Research for London First says that EU membership could add £13.9 billion to London's Economy by 2030 providing a 'permanent boost' to the capital's economy. London and the EU are economically intertwined. Putting up a barrier between us and the world's biggest free market would be financially devastating."

It added: "542,000 jobs in London were associated with the EU in 2011. Whilst these jobs would not be guaranteed to go post-Brexit, they would be far less secure if our major trading partner was less favourably accessible. HSBC alone have warned that around 1,000 jobs would move over the Channel if Britain were to exit the EU."

"Tackling and adapting to climate change is one of the most serious challenges facing London this century. It's only through working with our European partners that we can ever hope to bring down carbon emissions and create a more sustainable way of living. European directives have driven progress in tackling some of London's biggest environmental challenge from toxic air, to waste and recycling and combating climate change."

"The Home Secretary, Theresa May, has stated that the European Union is vital in the fight against international terrorism and that 'jihadists threatening Britain cannot be defeated by acting in isolation'."

Britain's membership means working in partnership with other EU nations, gathering and sharing intelligence that assists with identifying and preventing terrorist threats. Without this international collaboration and partnership Britain leaves itself vulnerable at a time of significant threats to its safety.

"While this Assembly believes that the EU needs reform and improvement, a blanket exit isn't the answer for London or for Britain. In terms of security, environment, finance and economy we are inextricably intertwined with our neighbours. To get the best deal for London we need to be at the table."

But the boss of Kensington disagrees. In a statement, Lady Borwick said: "I supported the Prime Minister in his efforts to renegotiate Britain's relationship with the European Union. It was a once in a lifetime opportunity to fundamentally change Britain's relationship with the EU. Regrettably, in spite of the Prime Minister's best efforts it appears that other Member States did not want to use this excellent opportunity to bring the EU into the 21st Century."

"As a member of the EU, Britain sends £50 million a day of British taxpayer's money to Brussels. I believe that this money would be better spent on tackling poverty in Britain, on additional funding for our NHS and supporting the most vulnerable in our country."

"I believe in localism – local people deciding where their money is spent and decisions being made as close to voters as is logical. I do not believe this can be achieved by handing the purse strings and decision making to the EU."

"Over the coming months both Remain and Leave will set out their views and it will be down to British voters – not politicians to decide whether we Remain or Leave. I look forward to the British people delivering their verdict."

Megan's pride is a lifesaver

A FULHAM schoolgirl was flying high after being chosen to name London's new air ambulance helicopter, writes Jack Dixon.

Six-year-old Megan Stocker decided to name the aircraft Walter, after her late grandfather.

Megan, who attends Holy Cross Primary School, was chosen as one of two winners of a competition to christen the capital's second chopper, which took to the skies for the first time last month.

"It was so exciting to go to the helipad," said Megan. "The helicopter was amazing and so shiny, and now with my grandad's name on it he will help keep it safe from up in heaven."

Megan's name was selected by a judging panel of doctors, pilots, paramedics and fire crew who were touched by her heart-warming entry.

She added: "I entered the competition because I love helicopters and wanted to make my grandad proud."

"I felt really happy and excited when I found out I had won and could not wait to come and see the new helicopter."

A fundraising campaign last year gathered thousands of donations towards the cost of the city's second helicopter.

The London Air Ambulance is continuing to appeal for financial support to cover the annual £6 million cost of providing the service.

A spokesman said: "We need your support now more than ever to maintain the delivery of our advanced trauma care to London and people can help by donating, volunteering, taking part in an event or asking the organisation they work for to support us."

Safety checks disrupt trains

RAIL services between Heathrow Airport and London were disrupted on Monday due to trains being recalled for unplanned safety checks.

A spokesman for Heathrow Express confirmed that the majority of its trains have been taken out of service due to a "technical issue".

As a result the non-stop 15-minute service between the airport and London Paddington is being operated by trains which are usually seen on the Heathrow Connect route.

The Heathrow Connect service – which stops at several intermediate stations – was suspended.

Heathrow Express director Fraser Brown said: "While we regret the inconvenience this will cause to our customers and airport colleagues, safety remains our top priority."

"We are working with Siemens engineers, who manage our depot site and the maintenance of our trains, to understand the extent of this issue. When we are aware of what we are dealing with we will be able to make a decision on when a full service will resume."

The Heathrow Express trains are being inspected at Old Oak Common depot, west London.

The operator said it had reduced ticket prices until the issue was resolved.

Passengers travelling to stations between Heathrow and Paddington were advised to make alternative arrangements.

Assembly's business view

THE number of Business Improvement Districts (BIDs) in London has grown over recent years, but the jury is still out on whether they have been a success.

A major benefit of BIDs is their ability to respond quickly to local priorities with the mandate of local businesses. They have demonstrated value in making improvements to high streets, but there are concerns around their accountability to local communities and that they may be asked to step in and fill gaps left by local councils.

The London Assembly Regeneration Committee report, Business Improvement Districts: The role of BIDs in London's regeneration, published this week, finds that BIDs have the potential to deliver significant local improvements, despite regeneration not being their core remit.

The report makes a number of recommendations:

■ The next mayor should establish a London Standard for BIDs and encourage all BIDs in London to sign up to a set of principles governing management.

■ The next mayor should continue to fund BIDs in the set-up phase, where there is local business demand for them, but the Greater London Authority (GLA) should also use funding to support a diversified offer to established BIDs.

Retailing report predicts 900,000 shop workers could lose their jobs

BY LWN REPORTER
editorial@londonweeklynews.co.uk

LONDON shop workers were given a bleak assessment of their future prospects this week when it emerged that there could be 900,000 fewer jobs in retail within the next decade as the effects of the national living wage and digital advances are felt.

Shop closures will have a varying effect across the country and impact already-vulnerable areas the most, a report from the British Retail Consortium said.

While the pace of change could mean thousands of job losses by 2025, those that remain will be "more productive and higher earning", the BRC said in its report entitled Retail 2020 Fewer But Better Jobs.

The retail industry is being reshaped by the digital revolution, the BRC said, as it described how 15 per cent of sales are now made online and there are around 40,000 fewer shops now than there were 10 years ago.

The introduction of the national living wage will cost the industry up to an extra £3 billion each year by 2020, the report predicted, although it added that retailers are generally supportive of the principle behind it.

Other costs are likely to come from business rates increases and the apprenticeship levy which is due to be introduced next April, the BRC said.

Employees who find it difficult to transition to newly created roles are likely to be most affected by changes, it said, and called on the Government to work with retailers to ensure the posts that remain are more productive and better-paid.

BRC chief executive Helen Dickinson said: "As an industry we expect the years ahead will see accelerating change."

"Retailers will develop better propositions and compete harder across an increasing range of business models from modern multi-channel formats through to discounters and on-line businesses."

"Recent policy announcements, in particular the national living wage and the introduction of the apprenticeship levy, will increase the pace of some of these changes."

The BRC is due to release

two further reports – one on what retail workers think, and another on how the industry can meet challenges and take advantage of new opportunities.

Sir Charlie Mayfield, chairman of the British Retail Consortium (BRC) and head of the John Lewis Partnership, said that although retailers supported the introduction of higher pay, there would be an effect on employment.

The retail sector employs three million people – a number that could fall by nearly a third in less than a decade.

Sir Charlie told the BBC that many shops would also close, as increasing costs and changes in the way millions of consumers shop take hold.

Of the 270,000 shops in the UK today, up to 74,000 could shut, the BRC report claims.

Nearly 30 per cent of those closures could be in Wales and the north of England.

"People are not realising just how significantly the workplace is changing and I think that is dangerous," he said.

"It means that people assume that somehow things are going to carry on as they are, when that's unlikely. Some of the places that will be affected will be some of the most economically fragile."

The BRC report says retailers are facing a heavy tax burden and that business rates have yet to be reformed.

Sir Charlie said there needed to be a fundamental review of retail taxes. Stores such as John Lewis pay far higher levels of tax in the UK than companies like Amazon.

Crossrail has royal visitor – although not everyone is on board

BY LWN REPORTER
editorial@londonweeklynews.co.uk

THE Queen visited the Crossrail station worksite at Bond Street last Tuesday – and discovered that the new railway will be known as the Elizabeth line in her honour.

Mayor of London Boris Johnson, who accompanied the Queen on her tour of the site, said that the Elizabeth line would “transform travel across the city, boosting the economy by billions of pounds and supporting thousands of new jobs and homes”.

The mayor was joined by Secretary of State for Transport Patrick McLoughlin MP, London’s Transport Commissioner Mike Brown MVO, the Crossrail infrastructure company’s chairman Terry Morgan and chief executive Andrew Wolstenholme, as they gave the Queen a tour of the Bond Street station site, which will see 24 trains per hour in each direction when the central section of the Transport for London-run railway opens in 2018.

The Queen was presented with a commemorative Elizabeth roundel, and met a wide range of people involved in the construction of Crossrail, Europe’s largest infrastructure project. This included apprentices working on building the railway, engineers fitting out the station and drivers of the trains that will serve the line.

This marks the latest in a long-held association between the Royal family and London’s Transport network.

The Queen became the first reigning monarch to travel on the London Underground in 1969, when she opened the Victoria line service.

In 1979, the Jubilee line was officially opened by HRH the Prince of Wales and was named to mark 25 years since her accession to the throne. In the same year, the Queen opened Heathrow Central station (Terminals 1, 2 and 3) on the Piccadilly line.

■ PRAISE: Crossrail is British engineering at its best, said Patrick McLoughlin

In the aftermath of the July 7 terrorist attack on the London Underground, the Queen unveiled a plaque at Aldgate station in 2010, remembering the lives of the 52 victims who had died.

In 2013, the celebrations of London Underground’s 150th anniversary saw the Prince of Wales and the Duchess of Cornwall take a trip on the Underground, and the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh and the Duchess of Cambridge visit Baker Street station.

Mr Johnson said: “Crossrail is already proving a huge success for the UK economy, and as we move closer to bringing this transformative new railway into service, I think it’s truly wonderful that such a significant line for our capital will carry such a significant name from our country. As well as radically improving travel right across our city, the Elizabeth line will provide a lasting tribute to our longest serving monarch.”

Mr McLoughlin MP said: “Given Her Majesty the Queen’s long association with UK transport, it is very fitting that this vital link across our capital will be named the Elizabeth Line in her honour. This is an example of British engineering at its best and will transform the way people travel across London and beyond from 2018, bringing better and faster journeys, while boosting jobs and driving economic growth.”

Mr Brown said: “This new railway is absolutely vital to meeting the needs of the capital’s rapidly growing population. The Elizabeth line will transform the way people get across our city and will enable London to continue to succeed, contributing to the economic health of the entire country. In running this important new railway we will ensure that it serves as a fitting tribute to Her Majesty the Queen.”

Mr Morgan said: “Construction for the new railway is now over 70 per cent complete and is being delivered on time and within budget.”

“The Crossrail project is one of the most ambitious and complex infrastructure programmes ever undertaken in the UK, the scale of engineering being delivered under the capital is quite incredible. The opening of the Elizabeth line in 2018 will be a significant moment for London.”

Stretching from Reading and Heathrow in the west across to Shenfield and Abbey Wood in the east, the Elizabeth line will change the way people travel around London and the South East and add much needed new capacity to London’s transport infrastructure. A fleet of brand new 200 metre long trains will run on the Elizabeth line, featuring nine walk-through carriages, air conditioning, CCTV and real-time travel information.

The mayor’s office said: “When the railway fully opens it will significantly increase the capital’s rail capacity, carrying over half a million passengers per day – the same number of annual visitors to Buckingham Palace. Some 1.5 million people will have better access to the jobs and opportunities of London’s main employment centres, and an estimated £42billion will have been added to the economy of the United Kingdom.”

'Fit more than one fire alarm'

WORRIED senior officers at London Fire Brigade are urging Londoners to check their smoke alarms in the home, saying one device is not enough.

New figures show that in two thirds of fatal fires over the past three years smoke alarms did not alert people to the fire because they hadn't been installed or were fitted too far away from where the fire started.

This has led to the LFB warning people should think about getting more smoke detectors in their homes.

According to LFB, fire deaths have come down dramatically recently. For the last three years the number of people who have died has been under 50 a year but officers believe greater home detection can further reduce the numbers.

Mortgage surge

THE number of mortgages approved by high street banks has topped 80,000 in a month for the first time in two years as buy-to-let investors rushed to beat a stamp duty hike.

Some 80,285 mortgages with a collective value of £13.6 billion got the go-ahead in January - marking a jump of one third (33 per cent) compared with January 2015, the British Bankers' Association said.

It is the first time since January 2014 that mortgage approvals have edged above the 80,000 mark in a single month.

Boris says annual budget builds on the good progress we've made

BY LWN REPORTER
editorial@londonweeklynews.co.uk

THE Mayor of London Boris Johnson's annual budget was approved by the London Assembly last week - fulfilling his manifesto commitment to reduce the mayoral share of Londoners' council tax bills by ten per cent during his second term in office.

The decision means a typical Band D council taxpayer has saved around £500 over Mr Johnson's eight years as mayor.

The 2016-2017 budget will see the mayor's share of council tax fall by 6.4 per cent - a reduction of £19 to £276 for Band D taxpayers. The budget also includes plans to protect police officer numbers and key transport improvements while supporting the construction of a record number of new homes and creating thousands of new jobs.

Mr Johnson said: "This budget delivers the growth and investment London needs to meet its surging population, supporting the delivery of new homes, vital transport infrastructure and protecting frontline policing. At the same time, we are relentlessly bearing down on unnecessary costs in order to once again put more money back in the pockets of Londoners by trimming council tax, leading to a ten per cent cut over my second term of office."

The mayor's 2016/2017 budget covers the entire Greater London Authority Group - including Transport for London, the London Legacy Development Corporation, the Metropolitan Police service and the London Fire Brigade. It includes:

■ The continued delivery of around £418million of funding to support economic regeneration in the capital.

■ The protection of police officer numbers at around 32,000 including a reinvigoration of neighbourhood policing by getting 2,600 extra officers into local neighbourhoods. It also includes investment in the latest digital technologies such as body worn cameras.

■ Investment in upgrading the Tube network including £250million on making more stations step free, the delivery of a northern Line extension to Nine Elms and Battersea and continued support for the delivery of Crossrail, which will increase London's rail capacity by ten per cent.

■ A £4billion investment on London's roads. £913million is due to be spent on cycling improvements, including cycle super-highways, quietways and mini-Hollands, £200million has been earmarked for bus priority schemes and 800 New Routemaster buses will be delivered by 2016.

■ Continuing the increase in the supply of affordable homes with a target of delivering 100,000 affordable homes over the mayor's eight years in office.

■ Ensuring the London Fire Brigade can continue to meet their response time targets.

■ A commitment to continue funding from the Mayor's Office for Policing and Crime for Survivors UK work with the victims of male rape.

■ The permanent re-opening of the former Olympic Stadium in the summer.

■ Support for the new Mayoral Development Corporation for Old Oak and Park Royal, a regeneration opportunity for west London which will deliver thousands of new jobs and homes.

■ Continuing to ensure young Londoners have the digital skills they need to access jobs in London's thriving technology sector.

■ SOLID FOUNDATIONS: The mayor's target is to build 100,000 affordable homes during his time in office

Military concerts 'will continue'

MILITARY concerts hailed as better than the Royal Albert Hall's proms are expected to continue at an historic south west London site, despite Government plans to sell it.

Defence minister Mark Lancaster told MPs last week he understood the British Army would carry on playing proms to the public in the grounds of Kneller Hall, near Twickenham.

The Ministry of Defence proposes to sell the building, which houses the Royal Military School of Music, with Mr Lancaster claiming it would cost at least £30million to bring the site up to standard while annual maintenance costs total more than £1million.

He questioned if this would be a good use of taxpayers' money for what was an "ageing site" that houses fewer than 75 staff, noting that 192 houses could be built in its place while the school of music would be relocated.

But Conservative MP Tania Mathias (Twickenham) warned the Government not to rip the "heart and soul" out of Whiston, the community which houses Kneller Hall, and to reconsider its plans.

She said: "It's tragic and extraordinary that in peacetime the Ministry of Defence has managed to create so much hostility in a peace-loving community."

Ms Mathias praised the "unique" site, adding: "The proms at Kneller Hall are far better than the proms at the Albert Hall because it's a community event, it's about the identity of the community."

Concluding a Westminster Hall debate, Mr Lancaster said: "I want to make clear that I acknowledge and recognise the emotive nature of closing sites, especially ones like Kneller

Hall that have been at the centre of the community for many years.

"I'm delighted to be able to say that I understand the army will continue to play proms to the public in the summer.

"I appreciate wholeheartedly the concerns of (Ms Mathias) and her constituency and I want to assure her that great consideration is given to all military establishments along with their historical and national significance.

"But, as I've already mentioned, this isn't about individual communities, individual bases, regiments or units, this is about ensuring defence has an updated, efficient, rationalised estate - fit for purpose and fit for it to operate now and into the future.

"This is about ensuring that the right resources are in the right place to keep Britain safe."

Working to support shops and markets

ACROSS the country shopping streets are struggling. A government commissioned review in 2011 found that high streets receive less than half of consumer spending in the UK and another report discovered that one in ten shops is empty.

Where once the threat to shops was large chains making each high street look exactly like the next, the rise of internet shopping means that those chains need fewer and fewer stores and the space returns to independent shops with a new challenge – getting enough customers through the door.

Portobello Road and Golborne Road are still thriving shopping areas, our markets are world-famous and the shop spaces on the Westway estate receive enough demand to mean none is ever empty for long.

However, shops and stalls in the area aren't without their problems. In 2010 the council produced a market visitor survey, which we intend to work with them to repeat soon, to help us understand the visitors to the area.

In the last survey a quarter of those visiting Portobello's Saturday markets said that they were browsers with little intention of spending any money.

In addition, 60 per cent of the visitors were tourists and only one in five came from the local area. When just a 15 per cent drop in takings can put a shop in trouble and 40 per cent of local retailers last year said they experienced a drop in income in the previous year, it's clear that no matter how exciting and vibrant our shops and markets are, their continued presence, which contributes so much to the character of the area, cannot be taken for granted.

Angela McConville, Westway Trust Chief Executive, talks about how local people and businesses will help bring Thorpe Close to life

We believe that we can help to support our local shop-owners and traders building on the existing culture and vibrancy by bringing even more people to the area and encouraging local people to shop here more regularly.

We've secured funding to animate Thorpe Close, the stretch of road under the Westway between Ladbroke Grove and Portobello Road. I hope we can turn this lane from what is normally a dull stretch of parked cars into a thriving space that supports businesses and enterprise activities in its own right while also bringing more people towards the Portobello markets and up to Golborne Road.

It was clear when my team and I recently went to meetings of the Golborne Forum and Market Street Action Group that there was a strong backing for bringing more life to Thorpe Close throughout the week.

We've secured significant funding from the Mayor of London's High Street Fund to create small pop-up units for start-ups and arts and cultural activity on Thorpe Close. This fund has already had a huge amount of success supporting distinctive shopping areas around London.

In Waltham Forest, Wood Street, a fading local shopping street with a market has been brought to life by helping owners brighten their shop fronts and bringing activities, art and other changes to the street space making it a place people want to stay and spend.

We bring no preconceptions about what will happen in and around the new spaces on Thorpe Close, what they'll look like, or even what they'll be made of. Starting with just a shape on the ground, we want local people and businesses to help design the spaces and how they'll be used.

We're working with a world-leading design studio that specialises in designing spaces in partnership with those that will be using them.

On our website you'll find details of two public workshops they'll be leading for us outside on Thorpe Close. The first, announced soon, will try to understand what people want the spaces to be used for and the second will use those ideas to start creating the spaces themselves.

We hope this ground up approach will produce something that truly reflects the character of the area and creates new opportunities for business, arts and enterprise in North Kensington while also providing a boost to the existing shops and markets.

Marble Arch business-boosting project

BUSINESSES from Marble Arch and northern Park Lane, throughout Connaught Village and Seymour Place and up Edgware Road to the Marylebone Flyover, voted Marble Arch Business Improvement District to lead on a new programme for the area that will see £2.5 million invested over five years.

Throughout February, Westminster City Council ran a formal ballot for businesses to submit their votes for the launch of the new BID.

Marble Arch Business Improvement District is now the eighth BID in Westminster, and will work with the council, the Mayor of London's office and Transport for London to drive a better future for businesses and locals in this thriving area.

Marble Arch BID will work to harness investment into the area and bring businesses across the area together to deliver public realm improvements, reduce levels of anti-social behaviour and introduce new visitor and business services.

The BID aims to improve trading conditions and make the area more successful for all.

'Work to do' for teenagers in our schools

BY LWN REPORTER
editorial@londonweeklynews.co.uk

TEENAGERS in London are lagging around half a school year behind their peers in many other major cities and regions worldwide, a new study claims.

In maths alone, secondary school pupils in Shanghai are around three years ahead of those in the capital, according to the research. It suggests that while London is known in England for high school standards, performing well in GCSE exams, and boosting the results of poorer youngsters, internationally its pupils are being surpassed by those from cities and regions in East Asia, Europe, North America and Australia.

The study, by researchers at the UCL Institute of Education, used data collected from the 2009 and 2012 Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA) tests which measure the abilities of 15-year-olds in reading, maths and science.

The results from around 1,057 London pupils were compared with those of youngsters around the world.

The study found that London was consistently outperformed in all three areas by Shanghai, Singapore, Hong Kong, Maastricht, Helsinki, Milan, the Australian states of Western Australia, New South Wales and Victoria, the Canadian provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, and Massachusetts and Connecticut in the United States.

Only the top 10 per cent of London's 15-year-olds could match the maths skills of the average Shanghai teenager, according to the study.

It is the first to compare the capital's performance in the PISA tests with other international cities and regions.

London teenagers did outperform some of their peers internationally – they were up to two years ahead of the poorest performing places, including Rio de Janeiro and Mexico State.

"Overall, we find strong evidence that educational achievement is higher in London than in a number of developing cities (eg Sao Paulo, Port-of-Spain, Dubai) but behind world leaders such as Massachusetts, New South Wales (Sydney), Ontario and Shanghai," the research concludes.

It also says: "Despite strong performance in England's national examinations, educational achievement in London remains some way behind that observed in other leading economies. Further progress is therefore needed."

Study author Dr John Jerrim said: "London schools have been rightly lauded in recent years for improving performance, particularly among pupils from disadvantaged backgrounds.

"However, London's comparatively poor PISA results seem to stem from certain groups performing worse than expected, including girls, ethnic minorities and young people from lower socio-economic groups. This is especially surprising as these groups end up doing much better on their GCSEs just six months after the international assessments.

"However, it is important to remember that this is just one assessment, and is a single piece in a much bigger jigsaw.

"London's success in GCSE examinations is still a cause for celebration, though clearly much more also needs to be done to ensure children in our capital city are able to compete with the best in the world."

London's deputy mayor for education and culture, Munira Mirza, said: "Whilst young Londoners get the best results in the country at GCSE, this research highlights the challenges still faced by London's disadvantaged students in achieving as well as their peers."

Crossbow bolt park incident

A GOOSE has been left with a "horrible injury" after being shot with a crossbow bolt in east London.

The bird was discovered in Hornchurch Country Park in the London borough of Havering with the bolt sticking out of its body on February 24.

The creature was taken by an RSPCA inspector to a local wildlife hospital, where X-rays showed the bird had a crossbow bolt through its pelvis and into the abdomen.

The inspector, Mitchell Smith, said: "This is a horrible injury and the goose must have been in a lot of pain. Fortunately he has now received veterinary care at a nearby wildlife hospital but we don't yet know if he will survive this ordeal."

The goose is expected to undergo an operation on his injuries in the coming days.

Under the Wildlife and Countryside Act it is an offence to take, injure or kill a wild bird and punishment can include fines up to £5,000 as well as a prison sentence of up to six months.

The RSPCA said it is not known who carried out the attack or whether it was done deliberately.

Anyone with information about the incident should contact the animal welfare charity in confidence on 0300 123 8018.

Man died in bid to get dog

A MAN died after being hit by a car as he ran into the road to catch his dog, police said.

The 35 year old was struck by a silver Peugeot 307 at 10.40pm on Friday, February 19.

He was treated by paramedics but died at the scene on Stockley Road roundabout in West Drayton, west London.

The driver of the Peugeot was not arrested and was helping the Metropolitan Police, whose officers have appealed for witnesses.

Detective Sergeant Stephen Pidgeon, leading the investigation, said: "We understand the deceased was trying to catch his dog, described as a German Shepherd or Alsatian, in the moments prior to the collision. As a result of this the deceased ended up in the road where he was struck by the car.

"If anyone remembers seeing this scenario or the collision itself, please contact police."

Officials seize hoverboards

TRADING Standards officials seized about 90 hoverboards at Heathrow airport and destroyed them.

The machines, imported from Hong Kong, were broken up to stop them being sold and possibly harming consumers.

Some of the self-balancing scooters burst into flames and had to be doused by a fire extinguisher as they were destroyed.

Trading Standards officers had intercepted the packages containing £7,500 worth of hoverboards before sending them for electrical tests. The boards were found to have faults which could have led to them unexpectedly exploding.

Gurkha fan Harry looks forward to Nepal trip

PRINCE Harry is "really looking forward" to his first trip to Nepal next month, Kensington Palace has said.

Harry's four-day trip begins on March 20 and is being carried out at the request of the UK Government.

The Prince has wanted to visit Nepal largely due to his admiration and respect for the Gurkha troops he served with in Afghanistan.

He is also keen to see how the country's rebuilding effort is progressing following the devastating earthquake in April last year.

A Kensington Palace

spokesman said: "Prince Harry is really looking forward to his first trip to Nepal. It is a country he has long wanted to visit.

"He has been moved by the stories of resilience of the Nepali people following the earthquakes last year and is now eager to learn more about their country and culture.

"With Britain and Nepal currently celebrating 200 years of co-operation, Prince Harry will experience the strength of the relationship and traditional warmth of the Nepali welcome."

Harry's tour will start and finish in the capital Kathmandu, where he will meet the nation's

■ MISSION: Prince Harry

first woman president, Bidya Devi Bhandari, voted into office last October.

Nearly 9,000 people were killed during the earthquake and aftershocks that struck Nepal last year and almost a million houses and buildings were damaged. Harry will meet people rebuilding their lives after the earthquake to learn about work to restore historic buildings and efforts to prepare for future disasters.

The Prince, who left the Army last summer after 10 years as an officer, served two tours in Afghanistan and worked as a forward air controller from 2007-08.

One of the highlights for the Prince was the chance to live and work with a unit of Gurkhas, men from Nepal famed for their fighting prowess.

Harry will visit the British Gurkha Camp in Pokhara, where he will commend the bravery and service to the Crown of the Gurkhas. He will also learn more about recruitment and the assistance offered by Gurkha forces to surrounding communities after the earthquake.

Nepal is known for its stunning scenery and the Prince will get the chance to take part in a trek, and will visit one of Nepal's national parks.

The last members of the Royal Family to tour Nepal were the Duke of Edinburgh and Princess Royal in November 2000.

Sophie backs services of sight charity

THE Countess of Wessex is coming to Kensington next week to go charity shopping and aid a drive to help the 175,000 Londoners with sight loss.

As patron of the Greater London Fund for the Blind, the Countess will open the new Geranium Shop in Kensington High Street.

The new charity shop will be the 12th that the GLFB runs in the capital. The shops specialise in selling quality clothes, books and furniture and are staffed by volunteers.

The Countess's visit coincides with the launch of a new campaign by the Royal National Institute for the Blind to recruit more volunteers for its Online Today project to help people with sensory loss to get online.

"Since its launch last year, Online Today events throughout the UK have helped thousands of people with sight and hearing loss get online," said a spokesman. "Now RNIB is appealing to local people to commit a few hours a month to visit blind and partially sighted people in their own homes and help them develop digital skills like browsing the internet, sending emails, and using an e-reader."

Karen Froggatt, head of volunteering at RNIB, said: "It's fantastic that people in London are so keen to volunteer locally. This is why we want even more enthusiastic and committed people in London to become Digital Skills Support volunteers. Spending a few hours a month helping a person with sight loss to develop the online skills many of us take for granted can transform that person's life, and boost their independence."

"There are more than 175,000 people with sight loss in London, many of whom would benefit from being supported by volunteers to learn online skills."

Underground bug triggers travel fears

BOSSES at Transport for London blamed a software bug for causing several travel apps to report that all London Underground lines were closed during the morning rush hour on Thursday.

The problem meant that several of the most popular travel apps for smartphones were showing that all Tube lines, as well as the Overground, were running no services.

TfL's social media pages were soon flooded with queries, while one app – Tube Map – sent out a notification to users confirming the bug and asking them to report any problems experienced.

The problem began at around 8am, according to reports – during the morning rush hour and one of the busiest times of day for the Underground. TfL said the issue was reported to web developers and was fixed by 10am, after receiving messages from worried passengers on social media.

The bug spread across several apps as TfL shares its service information with developers, who then use it to feed into their own apps.

According to the BBC, TfL initially said there was no problem with its feed but this soon changed, with the firm saying it had been made aware of an issue which would be looked into. Many were told to access TfL web pages in order to see "accurate" information.

Lords in focus

STUDENTS and staff at the University of West London, along with members of the public, were given a fascinating glimpse into the workings of the House of Lords on Monday, February 8 when Lord Daniel Finkelstein, political commentator and Associate Editor of The Times, came to the university to be interviewed by former barrister and BBC journalist Clive Coleman.

Philip Ellis, Head of Ealing Law School, introduced the event, which was held in the William Barry Theatre.

Lord Finkelstein talked about his career and ennoblement, and revealed that one of his proudest moments was when his mother, a Holocaust survivor, was able to attend his investiture. He also explained to the riveted audience the role of the House of Lords in the making and scrutiny of legislation, and that his maiden speech in the House was about gay rights in UK foreign policy.

Positive verdict after sober assessment of sobriety tags

BY LWN REPORTER
editorial@londonweeklynews.co.uk

AN innovative pilot to keep criminals sober will be extended throughout London, after it was shown to be successful in 92 per cent of cases.

Thanks to new funds from the Ministry of Justice and the Mayor of London, courts in the capital will be able to put an ankle bracelet on offenders whose crimes were influenced by alcohol.

The tags perform around-the-clock monitoring of alcohol in an offender's perspiration. If they drink again, breaching their alcohol abstinence order, they can be returned to court for further sanctions.

The Ministry of Justice is contributing £400,000 towards the cost of extending the scheme past its initial four pilot boroughs to the whole of the capital from April. The initiative will be run by the London Mayor's Office for Policing and Crime (MOPAC), which is contributing £450,000 to the extension.

Justice Secretary Michael Gove said: "I am absolutely committed to reducing re-offending – so we can cut crime and better protect the public."

"By giving courts this new power and making the latest technology available, we are helping offenders understand the detrimental impact drinking alcohol can have on their behaviour."

"This innovative approach has delivered impressive results so far and we will be building on them with this wider London roll out."

Mayor of London Boris Johnson said: "Alcohol-fuelled crimes put a huge strain on frontline services, costing the taxpayer billions of pounds each year.

"From assault, to drink-driving, to theft and criminal damage, this innovative technology is driving down re-offending and proving rehabilitation does not have to mean prison."

"After such a success in South London, it's time to roll out these tags to the rest of the capital and rid our streets of these crimes, by helping even more offenders stay off the booze and get back on the right track."

The Mayor's office for Policing And Crime has overseen an 18-month pilot of the sobriety tags across four London boroughs.

Last week's report found the tags enjoyed a 92 per cent compliance rate. In the first 12 months of the pilot, 113 alcohol abstinence requirement orders were made and offenders were required to remain sober for up to 120 days. This compares favourably with the compliance rate for other community based orders.

Iain Anderson, Deputy Director of Rehabilitation at the London Community Rehabilitation Company, said: "In the initial trials, the sobriety tag has already proved hugely successful in helping those convicted of alcohol-related crime to deal with the damaging impact of alcohol."

"Through sobriety tagging, we have seen a significant rise in the number of people who comply with their community order and we are really keen to expand this success by using this innovative 'tool' to achieve meaningful results."

Alcohol-related crime costs up to £13 billion per year – with a significantly higher number of incidents in London than elsewhere in the country. Police officers spend on average half of their time dealing with alcohol-related casework and around 40 per cent of A&E attendances are related to drinking.

The tags have been welcomed by the police, courts and probation officers to help reduce alcohol related re-offending, ease the pressure on police and the criminal justice system and make town centres safer, particularly at night.

ROYAL LONDON

Last chance for party ticket

LONDONERS who missed the opportunity to be at The Queen's official 90th birthday party have until next week for a last-ditch chance to try to get some sort of a place at it – or else risk the no-mercy of ticket touts who are already cashing in on the occasion.

Thousands were disappointed when 25,000 tickets for the four-day party went on sale in November and were all snapped up within hours.

The big bash, Her Majesty's 90th Birthday Party, will take place in Home Park at Windsor Castle from May 12 to 15. Members of the royal family will be attending the swish do on each night, with The Queen going on the last night.

"Her Majesty's 90th Birthday Party will be a celebration of The Queen's life, her love of horses, her dedication to the Commonwealth and international affairs and her deep involvement with the Navy, Army and Air Force," say the organisers.

"Over 90 minutes, 900 horses and more than 1,500 participants from around the United Kingdom and the world will create a joyful event for The Queen. The

■ ANNIVERSARY SALUTE: The Queen's love of horses will be reflected in the forthcoming celebration of her birthday

90-year journey will take us from the excitement of the birth, through to World War Two, her marriage, the coronation and a reign of more than 60 years. The celebration will use horses, actors, bands and dancers to tell the story.

"The participants will reflect The Queen's private and public interests. Performers will come from a number of countries, including Oman, Chile, New Zealand, Canada, Fiji, Australia, Azerbaijan and the UK. The military will be well represented and will include The Queen's Mounted Troops and more than 100 pipers."

The celebration will be created by the team that organised the successful Diamond Jubilee Pageant in Windsor in 2012. This time, technology will play an important part in the celebration.

"The 90-minute experience will be a fusion of the latest video projection, LED effects and theatrical lighting. The finale will be a kaleidoscope of memories and achievements," say the organisers.

Clearly the party promises to be the hottest ticket in town and now an extra 2,500 people can win the chance to be guests at it. A draw for 5,000 free tickets [2,500 of which are to be set aside for residents of Windsor] has opened, but will close on March 14. Although the free tickets do not exactly provide a place in the royal box, they will enable those lucky in the lottery to join the celebrations at the Long Walk at Windsor Castle for the last night, where the two-mile stretch will be turned into a huge party scene, with food and drink stalls, sideshows and giant screens erected for viewing the pageant, which will be screened live on ITV in a royal birthday show hosted by Ant and Dec. Those wanting to be at the party in the park can apply for up to four tickets online at www.hmq90.co.uk

Meanwhile, those who fatter wallets can always turn to the touts, who are already re-selling seats in the party enclosure at inflated prices – with tickets that originally cost £55 now selling online for £600.

Anne sets the pace with 544 royal engagements

SHOULD the royal family be bottling whatever super-vitamins Princess Anne is on and selling them in the shops at the royal palaces?

Although she marks her 66th birthday this August, the inexhaustible Princess Royal continues to lead the field when it comes to cramming her diary with public engagements. Last month she officiated at 22 appearances and this month she has already committed to get out and about for at least another 29.

Last year Princess Anne overtook her brother Charles for the first time in eight years, to become Britain's hardest-working royal. She undertook 544 engagements, 456 in the UK and 88 overseas, whereas Prince Charles officiated at 527 events, 147 of them aboard.

The list of who did most last year makes interesting reading, with The Queen and her children taking the top five positions in the chart of the 15 busiest royals.

Here is the 2015 busy list: The Princess Royal, 544 engagements; Prince Charles, 527; Prince Edward, 354; The Queen, 341; Prince Andrew, 275; the Duke of Gloucester, 270; the Duke of Edinburgh, 250; the Duchess of Cornwall, 235; the Countess of Wessex, 218; the Duke of Kent, 202; the Duchess of Gloucester, 145; Prince William, 122; Prince Harry, 108; Princess Alexandra, 88; the Duchess of Cambridge, 62.

So what is Princess Anne's secret? How does she manage to fit in so many engagements?

The answer, say her spokesmen, is a sandwich and not faffing about. By grabbing a sarnie in the back of her car she avoids long lunches and can zip from one engagement to another with ease.

ROYAL FAVOURITE: Princess Anne maintains an exhausting itinerary of nationwide royal appointments

Surely we won't forget the Duke's birthday (will we?)

SPARE a thought for the Duke of Edinburgh this summer, for although he will turn 95 no state nor any other celebrations are yet planned and he's even got to work on his birthday, writes Geoff Baker.

To be fair to the Duke, as The Queen's greatest supporter there will probably be nobody prouder than he in St Paul's Cathedral on June 10 [his birthday] when the Church of England throws a Service of Thanksgiving for Her Majesty's 90th birthday.

And it is entirely likely that somebody senior at the Palace will have a word in the ear of the officiating clergy to get them to add a line praising Prince Philip to whatever sermon is planned to honour The Queen.

But even so, notching up 95 years is a great achievement in anyone's book and as the Duke continues to be the second busiest royal in the family [after Princess Anne] with 14 days already set aside for public engagements this month and whatever days he has spare set aside for administration on the more than 800 organisations of which he is patron [as opposed to Prince Harry's 12], one would have thought that the World Wildlife Fund or the Industrial Society, the MCC, Royal Yacht Squadron, various polo clubs or even the actual Royal Navy might have something up their sleeves to mark their appreciation of his years of support.

One might have imagined that the Government too could have come up with an appropriate mark of recognition, but there is currently no sign of anything.

Of course, this may be due to the Duke's request that he wants "no fuss" for his 95th, just as he asked for on the occasion of his many previous birthdays, but still it is a surprise that a hunt for celebrations planned for Prince Philip's 95th reveals absolutely nothing.

A Google search of celebrations to mark The Queen's birthday provides 334,000 listings, but not one for her husband's big day.

Not even the Royal Collection Trust appears to be making any effort. The Trust, which eagerly sells all manner of royal souvenirs, is about to launch a new collection of crockery and whatnot to mark The Queen's 90th, but among the hundreds of royal items it markets through its shops at the Palaces and online there is not one item that specifically tributes Prince Philip – in fact the only item that even comes close to acknowledging his presence, let alone his vast contribution to the standing of the royal family, is a £595 bowl made to mark his and The Queen's 65th wedding anniversary, and that was made long ago in 2012.

A bit of a poor show. No wonder, when once asked to reflect on his life, he said, "I'd much rather have stayed in the Navy, frankly."

"Within roaring distance of the lions, Gir Lion Lodge is hidden away within our Land of the Lions development.

"Guests will bed down for the night in beautifully-decorated lodges inspired by the welcoming charm of hotels in the lion's native Gir Forest home in India," says the zoo.

"In addition to the bespoke, luxury accommodation, guests will enjoy a delicious two-course dinner and full-English breakfast. Entry into the zoo on both days and exclusive tours led by our passionate and knowledgeable hosts, are also included in the experience.

"The experience will run six nights a week from May until

Capital nights

EDITED BY GEOFF BAKER

WELL here's a world first – the bosses of the Eurovision Song Contest have made changes in the voting system so that the Planet Earth's most risible music festival will become "exciting".

Although it has long been felt that the only thing that could make Eurovision "exciting" would be for the stage to fall down, the contest's administrators believe they are now set to cause an adrenalin frenzy by changing the way they do the sums.

Yep, that'll do it; calculus never fails to cause a riot in our house.

Eurovisionaires are changing the rules in order to try stop most of Britain going down the pub half-way through the 210-minute saga.

As we know, watching Eurovision is usually an agony of a forgone conclusion as the nations vote according to their prejudices; the French demonstrate their remarkable capacity to forget Waterloo by marking down the UK, Russia expresses its displeasure at our irritating stand on the poisoning of Litvinenko by giving us nul points, Norway low votes us for protesting against their national bent for slaughtering whales and everybody else who has an axe to grind on British foreign policy follows suit.

And this year, with more than half of the UK already singing So'long, Farewell, Auf Wiedersehen, Goodbye before the song contest even starts, the UK would be doomed to get even fewer votes than usual as Europe gets the hump with our enthusiasm for a quick Brexit back to the joyful days of curry cucumbers.

Consequently, most of us can tell pretty early on in the Eurovision voting that the UK will never catch up and so we may as well switch off and go have a pint.

So they have changed the rules in order to keep us riveted in our seats, feverishly dribbling anticipation in the hope that our typically-rubbish entry might just pip at the post Malta's marching band of bearded lady goatherds.

The trouble is, being a Euro decision, nobody quite understands it and song contest websites are What's the (nil) point of this risible event?

currently awash with devotees asking 'what does it mean?'

According to Eurovision chiefs it will work like this: "In previous years the results of the professional juries and viewers have been presented as a combined result, each accounting for 50 per cent of the final score. From 2016, the professional juries and televoters from each country will award a separate set of points, from 1 to 8, 10 and 12. This now means the top 10 countries in both the jury and televote will receive points, adding a new level of excitement for hundreds of millions of viewers in Europe and beyond.

"After viewers have cast their votes by telephone, SMS or using the official app, each national spokesman from the 43 participating countries will be called in to present their votes of their professional jury.

"After the presentation of the scores from the juries, the televoting points from all the participating countries will be combined, providing one vote for each song. These televoting results will then be announced by the host, starting with the country receiving the fewest votes from the public and ending with the country that received the highest number of points, building towards a guaranteed climax."

Confused? Join the gang. Although we are assured by one Martin Osterdahl, executive producer for this year's contest, that the new rules will cause us to be gagging in our seats.

"In previous years the winner has been known up to 20 minutes before the end of voting and that's not good TV," says Mr Osterdahl, courageously assuming that Eurovision could be "good TV" in any circumstances.

"This format change will inject a new level of excitement into the finish of the Eurovision Song Contest. Under the new system, the winner will only be known in the final minutes of the show."

Alternatively, here's an idea: why not restrict Eurovision entries to those songs which convey the music industry's usual rule of thumb for a hit, a memorable melody, and therefore cut the length of the entire song contest to around one minute?

WITH BBC1 and BBC2 achieving a thundering combined share of the TV audience of only 29 per cent last month, doubtless readers are thrilled that the channels which they personally fund are doing so averagely – and may be even more ecstatic to learn who is paid how much at the nation's broadcaster.

The BBC has just published salary figures for its top bosses in the business of nice work if you can get it.

Besides learning that director general Tony Hall trousers £450,000 a year for directing generally, there are some other interesting sums to be seen in the accounts.

Fans of the funny stuff, such as that titan of pioneering comedy Mrs Brown's Boys, may care to congratulate Shane Allen, the comedy commissioner for TV, on his pay of £207,000, marginally less than the £210,000 that goes to Nick Betts, the controller of drama and film who brought us War & Peace and Call The Midwife.

Radio 4 listeners, charmed by Andrew Lawrence's recent and well-titled hilarity wowser How Did We End Up Like This? may also like to drop a line to Helen Boaden, director of BBC Radio, on her not-insubstantial £352,000, almost double the £183,000 wages of BBC creative director Alan Yentob.

Perhaps Alan Davey deserves a 'well done' too for the £184,000 he gets as controller of Radio 3, ten grand less than the £194,800 that Faith Penhale receives for the memorably-epic productions that come out of her department of drama at BBC Wales.

And good though it is to see Panorama editor Ceri Thomas receiving £166,448 and Newsnight editor Ian Katz £150,600, it is interesting that the going rate for captaining these flagships of great journalism lags significantly behind that paid for the clearly-fundamental role of Valerie Hughes-D'Aeth, who picks up £295,000 for running the BBC's HR.

Auntie, are you being serious? Another re-make in store

THE BBC has denied that London's most-famous fugitive Julian Assange was originally in mind for the lead role in its forthcoming remake of Are You Scrapping The Barrel? Sorry, we meant Are You Being Served?

Despite his remarkable similarity to actor John Inman, it seems that the Wikileaks editor was not the first choice to help Mrs Slocombe look for her pussy in the restaging of the saucy department stores sitcom of 30 years ago, which is the BBC's big hope to persuade the Government that it is a thrusting broadcaster in need of a bigger wad, and other such typically-Grace Brothers jokes.

This will doubtless come as a blow to writer and former MP Louise Mensch and the thousands of other Twitter enthusiasts who noted Assange's stunning resemblance to Inman when photographs of the pair went viral a little while back and social media types asked if they were perchance related.

Unfortunately, as Mr Assange is currently appearing daily as Roger The Lodger in the popular farce running at the Ecuador Embassy in Knightsbridge he was not available to mouth Mr Humphries' parts, especially not the famous "I'm free!" line.

Instead, BAFTA-winning Jason Watkins will play the mincing sales assistant in the special one-off which will co-star Coronation Street's Sherrie Hewson as Mrs Slocombe, the dragon whom Mollie Sugden made a mistress of the double entendre. The BBC says the return of Are You Being Served? will pick up where the series last left off, which is handy for anyone born before 1985.

However, it stands to be an eye-opener for those since-born who may be confused by such Mrs Slocombe classics as, "I met my husband in a German air raid. His face was lit from an incoming incendiary. He threw me flat on me face and said: 'Look out, here comes a big one!'"

Are You Being Served Again? will air

on BBC One later this year as part of a BBC landmark comedy season to celebrate the 60th anniversary of the television sitcom, but as the BBC of now is a different, inclusive beast from the broadcaster of back then, there are fears that the remake will be lacking in its characteristic sauce.

But as former Hollyoaks star Jorgie Porter has been cast to play Miss Croft, an assistant to Young Mr Grace, we are assured that the new show will have ample assets in that direction.

BY NICKY SWEETLAND AND JACK DIXON ● EDITED BY GEOFF BAKER

HOPES are rising that two of Britain's foremost musical scions, James McCartney and Dhani Harrison, may gig together later in London later this year.

The expectation [in this newsroom at least] is gathering after James, son of Paul, and Dhani, son of George, came together to work on an excellent new track from James's forthcoming new album, The Blackberry Train.

The Beatles sons hooked up to record James's new single Too Hard, and the result reveals that as guitarists the pair are both well up there with the playing of their famous fathers. James, who was given his first Stratocaster by the legendary Carl Perkins, has been playing blistering guitar since he was a young teenager, impressing and delighting his parents that one of his first influences was Jimi Hendrix, their old pal, with whom they used to go clubbing down at The Speakeasy.

Indeed, one can hear the intensity of Hendrix's passion in the superb lead guitar that James ripped out for The Light Comes From Within, a gutsy, brave and brilliant song that Linda McCartney wrote for her posthumous solo album, Wide Prairie.

Linda's song, the definitive anthem for those put down by life, was banned by the BBC on its release in 1998, due to the idol of millions' and veggie queen's bitter use of certain words that Radio 1 gets iffy about. This was a shame as it denied many the chance to hear James's searing guitar on Linda's superb song. James recently hosted a sold-out, three-show residency at The Islington, where he debuted his new material, and now it is hoped that he will announce new gigs in the capital to promote the new album ahead of its release on May 6, possibly at The Islington again – although the strength of the catchy single, which sounds very like The Traveling Wilburys, indicates that the damn good guitarist could graduate to the musos' muso's hall, the Half Moon in Putney.

Either way, Too Hard is tipped to get a lot of radio play, it's a Chris Evans record of the week if ever there was one, and this could easily become the first big hit for the shy and thoughtful songwriter.

"I wrote it in LA and tried to infuse it with a country feel to really bring out that desperation, and the idea of trying too hard. Dhani Harrison came into the studio and we both collaborated on the guitar solo in the song," says James, who has also written Waterfall, a song inspired by memories of Linda, for his new album.

"This set of songs definitely has a harder edge, but it's a continuation of the last album. The main thing for me is to not conform or compromise.

"I like the music to have elements of the avant-garde, psychedelic, and be just a little against the grain. But in the end, it's about having as much emotion as possible for me, musically and lyrically. It's all about the music being cathartic, heartfelt and true."

A few years back James launched his first album, Me, with a show at the Ambassadors Theatre with Rolling Stone Ron Wood joining him on stage as lead guitarist – and his father making a surprise appearance on piano. Who knows what other rock royalty may join the younger McCartney for gigs for his new album?

Whoever shows, they should be pleased that the inherited gene theory clearly works.

ALTHOUGH Sir Paul McCartney has been having trouble getting VIP access to guest list-only events of late, the former Beatle has revealed that in the old days before the planet became celebrity-obsessed he himself would let anyone in, including Jesus.

Sir Paul, who was recently embarrassed when he was turned away on camera from the Grammys after-party hosted by the LA rapper Tyga, tells a story that back in the days they called The Sixties, it was a lot less hassle getting past the doorman – especially when Macca was the man on the door.

He recalled that the night when The Beatles strayed away from their usual haunt at Abbey Road to record at Regent Sound Studios in Tottenham Court Road instead, he surprised his bandmates by turning up with the Messiah in tow.

"It was the night we were recording Fixing A Hole for the Sgt Pepper album," he remembers. "I brought along a guy who was Jesus."

As you do.

The Beatles bassist had been at home in St John's Wood when there was a not-unusual knock on the door.

"I always used to answer it to anyone. If they were boring I'd say no and they would go away. But this night there was this guy saying 'I'm Jesus Christ'. I was a bit shocked but I said 'Well, you'd better come in then'. I thought that it probably wasn't him but just in case it was, I wasn't going to be the one to turn him away. So I gave him a cup of tea and we had a chat but then I had to go to this session.

"So I said to him, 'Look, I've got to go to a session now but if you promise to be quiet and just sit in a corner, you can come.' So he did, he came to the session. The other guys were a bit surprised, asking 'who's that?' I said, 'It's fine, be cool, he's Jesus'. But I never saw him after that."

Paul is not the only legend to have been turned away in his time. His pal Keith Richards once suffered the same fate in St Tropez, when a bouncer barred him from entering the wedding ceremony of fellow Rolling Stone Mick Jagger, at his marriage to his first wife Bianca Macias.

As Keith was meant to be the best man at the wedding, which was swamped by a crush of international press people, this could have been something of a problem until – legend has it – Keith drew attention to being left outside by throwing something heavy through a window. The shattering glass made the point and he was hastily rushed in.

Mind you, there were no breaking windows the night that Mick himself was barred from entry at The Blitz club owned by the late Steve Strange, for not looking cool enough.

Fellow New Romantic Tony Hadley recalled: "If you didn't look right, Steve wouldn't let you in, at The Blitz you couldn't look normal. I remember one night he was feeling quite pleased with himself because he turned away Mick Jagger. I said 'Steve, you're not serious, you haven't?' He said, 'Oh yes, he just didn't look right'."

FOR many people it is the quintessential nightmare scenario: you're trapped in front of the camera's glare wearing nothing but your underpants.

But that is exactly how Sacha Baron Cohen chose to arrive at the premiere for his new film, Grimsby, in Leicester Square last week.

For one of comedy's most daring performers, it's all part of the act.

No stranger to shock tactics, the west London actor has come to be known for his wild stunts and red carpet antics.

He turned up for the launch of his 2006 film Borat riding a cart pulled by a mule and befooled countless celebrity guests as alter-ego rap poser Ali G.

In his latest role, the dim-witted football fan Nobby haphazardly flung into the perils of an all-out action adventure, the Golden Globe winner surprises once again.

Baron Cohen says it was always his dream to take on an espionage thriller but he had trouble convincing directors he could pull it off.

"I approached JJ Abrams and said,

■ RAW TALENT: Sacha Baron Cohen on the red carpet

'Listen, I want you to cast me as an action hero', and he said, 'No'. Then I approached Spielberg and he said, 'No', and it went around until I realised I had to do my own action film.

"So I came up with this concept. The idea was: what would James Bond's idiotic brother be like? What if James Bond was really from Grimsby and was actually a little thug as a kid?"

Following the comedy capers of his most recent reality-bending characters Bruno (Bruno) and General Aladeen (The Dictator), Nobby is a closer-to-home comic creation.

But co-star Mark Strong, who plays Baron Cohen's M16 assassin brother in the film, admits there was madness on set.

"Sacha's on a mission to poke fun at everything he can and create disorder wherever possible," he says.

"One particular day Sacha fell on me and smashed a bottle over my head repeatedly. Then I was drowned in a car, spent three days in a silicone sleeping bag, had a day on the African plains and was subjected to three days in a small house with Nobby's entire family."

Grimsby is in cinemas now.

Talk of the town

A BRAND new musical will land in the West End with a bang next month as Miss Atomic Bomb makes its world premiere at the St James Theatre.

The show, which boasts a truly all-star cast, is set in the 1950s as the US military proudly tests its atomic bombs within sight of the Vegas Strip, writes Nicky Sweetland.

I was invited to watch a sneak preview of the musical, which somehow manages to encapsulate all of the innocence of the era without the show feeling at all old fashioned. From the small excerpt which we were treated to, it seems the writers have been able to bring the ideology of an old-time musical and mould it into a modern show which includes plenty of comedy, high tempo tap and some dazzling original music.

Musical to make powerful impact on the West End

Miss Atomic Bomb stars award-winning star of TV and theatre Catherine Tate, who is reunited with West End star Simon Lipkin following their critical and audience success in Sondheim's Assassins at the Menier Chocolate Factory.

They are joined by Daniel Boys – a finalist in BBC 1's Any Dream Will Do, rising musical theatre star Florence Andrews, the youngest member of the Strallen musical dynasty, Sasi Strallen and Dean John Wilson, who will take the lead role in Disney's Aladdin this Summer.

Dean plays a young soldier called Joey in the show and took some time out of rehearsals to chat to me about the new musical and about landing the title role in Aladdin. He told me a bit about the premise of Miss Atomic Bomb, which is based on real life events around the testing of nuclear bombs in the 1950s and the huge tourist trade which sprang up in response to the public's interest.

Tourists are flocking into town to cheer the blasts and see who will be crowned the Miss Atomic Bomb beauty queen and it seems only Joey can forecast the trouble ahead.

Dean tells me: "Joey's a very interesting character. He's very vulnerable but he's lovable at the same time. He's also intelligent, he's very bright. He knows things that most people around that time didn't know. The idea of radiation and of the radiation around these atomic blasts. You know the life span of atomic blasts is 50,000 years?"

The radiant new musical comedy is co-directed by the Olivier Award-winning choreographer Bill Deamer (Top Hat) and Adam Long (The Complete Works of William Shakespeare Abridged) – and the dancing has been a real challenge for Dean, whose more recent roles have been a little more stationary.

"The last time I wore a pair of tap shoes was ten years ago and they weren't mine! I literally haven't worn any since. For the next job I'm going to go into I'm going to need to tap as well but this is a really good warm-up and it's been difficult but it's been good and I'm really enjoying it."

The comedy musical has a love story at its core which sees Dean's character fall in love with a farm girl played by the wonderfully talented Florence Andrews. Joey deserts the army and hides out at a hotel in Vegas where he helps to save his brother from a group of dastardly gangsters.

"The show goes through so many dynamics. One minute you're laughing hilariously at some of the great actors in the show and then the next minute you just want to pour your heart out. In musical theatre nowadays you don't really get a chance to care for characters but this show does that. This is what musical theatre's about and this is what's going to move musical theatre forward."

Following his limited run in Miss Atomic Bomb, Dean is set to take on the biggest role of his career to date when he jumps upon a magic carpet at the Prince Edward Theatre for the big budget Disney musical version of Aladdin. The show transfers from Broadway,

■ LEAD: Catherine Tate stars in Miss Atomic Bomb

where it has achieved huge success, but gaining one of the most coveted roles in musical theatre wasn't an easy task.

Dean said: "I had 11 auditions and I was living at home in Middlesbrough at the time. It was a hard process. I was living at home with my mum and coming down here and living on sofas."

When the young actor eventually got the call to say he had scooped the part, it came as a shock.

"I dropped the phone and had an almost out of body experience. My whole body went cold. I sat up and without me even thinking about it, tears just starting dripping. I told my agent I had to call him back but because my tears had gone on the phone I couldn't press the touch screen."

Dean has had to fit in the preparation for Aladdin whilst rehearsing for Miss Atomic Bomb and has even been over to Broadway with his co-star, former Sugarbabe Jade Youens, for photo shoots and costume fittings.

The gruelling schedule is a synch for the athletic star however, who takes his fitness and diet very seriously and enjoys the challenge of getting his body ready as part of the preparation for a role.

"I eat incredibly clean and try to exercise every morning before I come to work. I'm an early bird and go for a power walk and listen to an audio book or just go to the gym. I just try to set myself up for the day."

You can see the West End heart-throb in Miss Atomic Bomb at the St James Theatre from March 7 until April 9. If you would like more details, you can visit the theatre's website, stjamestheatre.co.uk

This war is lost

War of the worlds **

THERE'S no doubt that Jeff Wayne's 1978 concept album is a true rock masterpiece and gives the classic stories by HG Wells a depth and feeling only good music can achieve.

The part staged production, which opened last week at the Dominion Theatre, relies totally on this sumptuous score to give it any credibility in a show which feels for its entire duration like it hasn't quite hit the mark, writes Nicky Sweetland.

Wayne himself conducts the onstage orchestra, which fills the auditorium with the booming soundtrack, but that's where the majestic spectacle ends, as much of the rest of the production is very underwhelming.

No doubt the stage effects have cost a pretty penny but I found them corny, particularly the 30-foot alien which tiptoed across the stage every now and then and the overuse of fire and seemingly ill-choreographed flying sequences.

Performance-wise, the ensemble worked hard but a lot of the direction was repetitive and I found some of the plethora of stars who were wheeled in to promote the extravaganza, including David Essex, Daniel Bedingfield, Jimmy Nail and Michael Praed, needed to up their vocal delivery both in tone and pitch.

Although only fulfilling small roles, the girls were much better, with Heidi Range shining as the angelic Beth and Madalena Alberto once again proving her quality in both her exquisite singing and her general stage mastery – which totally outdid all of the other performers.

I shut my eyes for large parts of the show, partly because the lights flashing into the auditorium were at times blinding but also because it seemed like the best way to enjoy the music, which is worth the ticket price on its own. There's not really any need of the added accoutrements, in my humble opinion.

BY NICKY SWEETLAND

Mrs Henderson Presents ****

I RE-WATCHED the 2005 film adaptation of Mrs Henderson Presents over Christmas in readiness for this highly anticipated theatrical event and I couldn't wait to see how director Terry Johnson would adapt it into a full musical, writes Nicky Sweetland.

Of course, Martin Sherman's plot already leant itself to the genre, as the tale is set in the famous Windmill Theatre in Soho, but I couldn't have imagined just how much more charm and heart could be added to an already glorious story by giving it a soundtrack.

It starts in 1937 when Mrs Henderson (Tracie Bennett) finds herself as a widow with plenty of money but really nothing that interests her to spend it on.

She invests in the iconic theatre and with the help of manager Vivian Van Damm (Ian Bartholomew) transforms the venue into the place to be with a non-stop revue.

Then, as business begins to fail with the interruption of the Second World War, the pair are inspired by the Moulin Rouge and hit upon a way to keep the home fires burning within the hearts and loins of their loyal following.

Tony winner, Bennett is a tour de force as the lovable but formidable Mrs Henderson, a role which was played by the formidable Dame Judy Dench in the film version. Bennett trips about with a light gaiety and puts her heart and soul into the character, who has lost many of the people she loves and so channels her hopes and dreams into the The Windmill and the cast of misfits who make it their home.

The rest of cast, which includes charming turns from Bartholomew, Jamie Foreman and Emma Williams, will be best remembered however, for showing more than their usual character traits.

■ ENTREPRENEUR: Tracie Bennett is Mrs Laura Henderson

Soundtrack celebrates this classic theatre tale

The Windmill Theatre was one of the first and possibly the most famous theatres to use nude tableaux vivants as part of their revues.

The "living pictures" sought to marry the art forms of the stage with painting and photography and within this production are understandably the biggest talking point. Lit beautifully but at all times maintaining a homely realism, the models led by the golden voiced Williams expertly portray the art form without there ever being even the slightest suggestion of sordidness.

This is a really delightful show with great music, fabulous staging and a wholesome story which reminds us of the perils of war but also of the human stories behind each fallen hero. Highly recommended.

Jackie's back: read all about it!

NINA Myskow says society has lost its innocence and is hoping to bring back memories of a more simple era with her new venture, which reflects a golden age for many mature women.

The writer and broadcaster made the comments at the launch of a new musical based on the classic girl's magazine Jackie. Myskow was the editor of the publication from 1974-78, which was famous for its hunk pullout posters and problem pages and at its height attracted more than one million readers.

Myskow has been brought in as part of the creative team behind the new production, which also includes the veteran choreographer Arlene Philips.

Likely to be a smash hit with women between the ages of 40 and 65, the brand new musical includes songs from the 70s and follows Jackie, a woman who's hit a mid-life crisis and stumbles across her old collection of magazines.

Myskow and the show's producers liken the magazines and their legendary Cathy and Clare problem pages to a 'bible' for teenage girls and it's this concept which forms the basis of the story.

Myskow said: "I think every woman will identify with what she's going through."

The weekly publication was first printed in 1964 and by its closure in 1993 had produced a whopping 1,534 issues. Celeb fans of the magazine include Emma Thompson, who had a photograph published on the readers' letters page, and Fiona Bruce, who appeared as a comic strip model on a number of occasions.

Enthusiasts of the magazine can look forward to scenery which incorporates some of the most iconic page designs and songs by 70s heart-throbs including Donny Osmond and David Cassidy, in this affectionate portrait of life before smart phones and social media.

Myskow said: "I could never possibly have – fast forward nearly 50 years – imagined that Jackie could flourish and flower as a musical on stage.

"I hope what makes it resonate today still with those readers of all those years ago is the fact it was based, it was underlined, with a healthy dose of realism with the Cathy and Clare page and with the articles we tried to give them."

Press were invited to watch a rehearsal of the new show last week and were treated to a very lively dance number to Mud's Tiger Feet, with a young and vibrant cast lead by Janet Dibley, who is to play the eponymous heroine.

Dibley, who is best known for the 1980s ITV series The Two of Us alongside Nicholas Lyndhurst, is joined by the former EastEnders star Nicholas Bailey and the acclaimed West End actor Graham Bickley for the show, which will tour the UK. Jackie the Musical will visit the New Wimbledon Theatre in June.

WINE & DINE

The food and drink page for West London

By Keeley Bolger

AFTER 15 years of marriage, Davina McCall surprised her husband Matthew by arranging to renew their vows in Las Vegas last Spring.

Romantic as it sounds, the TV presenter and fitness fanatic insists it was quite the opposite. In fact, the whole day was a family affair, with their three children – Holly, 14, Tilly, 12 and nine-year-old Chester – secretly writing the vows on the plane, and two “really great friends” who couldn’t come to their wedding in 2000 joining in on the surprise.

“I said to Matthew, ‘We’re going to renew our vows’, and his face sort of fell,” McCall, 48, recalls with a laugh. “He said, ‘Oh my God, that’s so cheesy. No!’”

“I said, ‘Darling, we’re just going in our clothes, you don’t have to change into anything, we’re going to have a real laugh, the kids have written the vows’, and he went, ‘Actually, that’s quite cute’, and we all piled down to the Little White Chapel and laughed our way through our wedding vows.

“It was brilliant because it was very casual, we didn’t make it into a great big thing.”

After this long together, the couple have a good rhythm at home – but McCall notes that there’s always room for improvement...

“It’s funny because recently, when I’ve worked a couple of nights, Matthew’s cooked for friends or cooked for the kids, and I think, ‘Hang on a minute, how come you never cook when I’m there?’ He’s actually quite a good cook, so I was like, ‘Right that is it – you are going to cook for me a bit more!’ He’s very good at cooking, Matthew.”

McCall – who can currently be seen hosting Channel 4’s winter sports show The Jump – is also a dab hand in the kitchen of course, recently adding another healthy-eating cookbook to her repertoire.

Written out of frustration at the confusing advice surrounding carbohydrates, Davina’s Smart Carbs

■ SMART CARBS: Davina McCall

seeks to simplify the issue.

“I’ve always been telling everybody about eating a balanced, healthy diet [one that includes carbs], and then I suddenly thought, ‘Have I been telling people the wrong thing?’ Then a nutritionist told me that there are good carbs and bad carbs, and we came up with this idea of smart carbs.

“It makes total sense; there are smart carbs, ones that are good for us – and there are some very simple changes we can make.”

These changes include swapping white bread, rice and pasta for brown varieties (“That’s a no-brainer”) and using sweet potato in place of regular spuds.

McCall recalls how she thought her kids would “balk” when she first made a chicken crumble with a cauliflower, quinoa and Parmesan topping – but actually they loved it.

“It’s interesting, you think, ‘Oh well, the kids aren’t going to like it’, but the kids have got more adventurous with the new stuff I give them. They’re into trying new things.”

She acknowledges that mealtimes can sometimes be a battleground, however and explains how she copes.

“I’ve got three kids and quite often, two of them like something and one of them doesn’t. I don’t make them something different – I just say, ‘Have some of the veg and have a bit more of this if you don’t like that’.

“I always try and get them to try it,” McCall adds. “The more somebody tries something, the more likely they are to like it in the end.” Fancy trying some of McCall’s recipes yourself? Here is a tasty recipe from Davina’s Smart Carbs...

Bubble and squeak

Serves 4

300g carrots, cut into chunks
300g swede, cut into chunks
10g butter
150g spring greens, cabbage or Brussels sprouts, shredded
1tbsp olive oil
1 small onion, finely chopped
Olive oil spray
Poached or fried eggs, to serve (optional)
Salt and black pepper

Method

Bring a saucepan of water to the boil. Add the carrots and swede and cook them for about 10 minutes or until tender. Drain thoroughly, then tip them back into the saucepan and leave them over a low heat for a few minutes, just to help steam off any excess liquid. Swede in particular can get quite waterlogged, so this is important.

Mash the carrots and swede with the butter until fairly smooth. Tip the mash into a bowl and leave it to cool, then chill it in the fridge for a while to firm it up.

Wash the greens thoroughly, put them in a saucepan with a little water and cover the pan. Place the pan over the heat and cook for a few minutes until the greens have wilted down, then drain them thoroughly and leave them to cool.

When you’re ready to cook the bubble and squeak, mix the root veg mash and the greens together and season with salt and pepper.

Heat the oil in a large non-stick frying pan and gently fry the chopped onion over a medium heat until it’s softened and caramelising around the edges. Add this to the vegetables, then tip everything back into the frying pan and spread the mixture out into a large round.

Cook the bubble and squeak over a medium heat for several minutes until it’s nice and brown underneath and cooked through.

Meanwhile, preheat your grill to its highest setting. Spritz the top of the bubble and squeak with olive oil spray, then pop it under the grill for three to four minutes until it’s browning around the edges and in patches on top. Cut it into wedges and serve as part of a brunch with poached or fried eggs, if you like.

MARK HIX’S RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Asparagus tempura

Serves four

DEEP-FRYING asparagus in a light, crisp batter makes a delicious snack, starter or canapé.

You can vary the sauces you serve this with – from a classic Japanese number to Vietnamese nuoc cham, or even a wasabi-flavoured mayonnaise.

Ingredients

300-400g asparagus, with the woody stems removed Vegetable or corn oil for deep frying
For the batter
100g tempura flour
Chilled sparkling water to mix
Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Method

Asparagus tempura makes a delicious snack, starter or canapé (Jason Lowe)

First, make the batter: mix the tempura flour with enough water to make a batter; then season.

Preheat about 8cm of oil to 160-180C in a large, thick-bottomed saucepan or electric deep-fat fryer.

Dip the asparagus in the batter a few pieces at a time, drop into the oil and cook for 2-3 minutes, turning with a slotted spoon until lightly golden, then remove and drain on some kitchen paper and sprinkle lightly with sea salt.

Serve with a sauce of your choice on the plate or in little dishes.

■ DELICIOUS SNACK: Asparagus tempura

Curried sweet potato soup

Serves 4 to 6

2 tablespoons olive oil
2 onions, chopped, 4 garlic cloves, finely chopped, 2 inch piece of ginger, peeled and grated, 1 red chilli, deseeded and finely chopped, 1 tablespoon garam masala, 2 tspns curry powder. 1 litre vegetable or chicken stock, 400 ml tin coconut milk. Sauté chopped onions in olive oil over a medium low heat for ten minutes until soft and translucent. Add garlic, ginger, chilly, garam masala, and curry powder and stir for a minute. Add diced sweet potato and turn briefly in the spices before adding the stock and simmering for 15 minutes. Blend in a magimix or similar blender and then add the coconut milk.

Chestnut and sage soup

Serves 4 to 6

1 tablespoon olive oil
1/2 oz butter
1 medium onion chopped
6 large sage leaves, roughly chopped, 1 small garlic clove, finely chopped, 1 litre of vegetable or chicken stock, 400 g cooked, peeled chestnuts, 100 ml creme fraiche
Heat olive oil and the butter in a saucepan over a medium low heat and sweat the onion for about ten minutes until soft and translucent. Pour in the stock, add the chestnuts and simmer for 15 minutes, stirring from time to time. Purée the soup until slightly smooth, I like to leave a little texture from the chestnuts. Finish by adding the creme fraiche.

THE first thing I ever think of cooking at this time of year is delicious warming soup, what better way to warm up after braving the cold!

I make no apology for both soups being from recipes by Hugh Fearnley-Whittingstall as they are both such star recipes!

Why not make up a batch of both and freeze in individual portions so you can quickly pull them out of the freezer as and when you need them.

Both are special enough to serve as the starter at a dinner party. The chestnut sage soup is my most asked-for recipe.

Improving Rangers in cruise control

IT may not quite be a distant memory yet, but at least the pain of Queens Park Rangers' recent home drubbing by local rivals Fulham has been eased by a new unbeaten run of three games in a week.

First half goals from Tjaronn Chery and Junior Hoilett (a penalty) sealed R's convincing 2-0 win against Birmingham City on Saturday.

The victory was just QPR's third since Jimmy Floyd Hasselbaink took over as manager and the first time they had scored more than once at Loftus Road since December 15.

Rangers move up to 11th, 11 points adrift of the play-off places with 12 games to go.

Hasselbaink said: "It was a very satisfying performance from us. We played good football, took control of the game from minute one and were deserved winners."

"The first goal was very pleasing, with an overlapping run from 'Perchy' (James Perch) and a lovely finish from Chery, who took his chance very well.

"We looked in control then and kept our concentration well against a very good Birmingham City team."

Front to back

He added: "I was pleased with how we defended from front to back. Alex (Smithies) had to punch a few balls and come from a few crosses. He had one save to make from a header and he did."

"The guys in front of him were good. They defended well – and that gave us the base to produce a good performance."

"I thought we got it right tactically, which is something we worked on. That is always pleasing."

"Let's not forget, Birmingham are a very good side. They are well organised and have only conceded three goals in their last eight games.

"Credit has to go to us for the win today – I can't have any complaints with any of the boys. I thought we cruised home in the end."

Victory in W12 rounded off an unbeaten week for R's following back-to-back away draws at Bolton Wanderers and Sheffield Wednesday.

and Hasselbaink added: "It was needed today. We owed it to ourselves and to the fans after our last performance here against Fulham."

"We showed – the boys showed – the fans that we care."

"It was a very solid performance from us."

After visiting struggling Milton Keynes Dons this Saturday, Rangers return home to face Derby County on Tuesday.

■ THE Football Association is investigating an alleged coin-throwing incident at QPR on Saturday.

LOFTUS ROAD RANGERS REVIEW
With Tony McDonald

R's players were apparently targeted as they celebrated Junior Hoilett's penalty goal.

Police made three arrests – one for racially aggravated assault on a police officer, one for entering the pitch and one for a Public Order offence.

All three men arrested at Loftus Road have been bailed pending further enquiries.

Meanwhile, QPR has begun its own investigation into the incident, while Birmingham have promised stern action against anyone found responsible.

A QPR statement said: "A coin from the School End stand, in which the visiting supporters were situated, was thrown towards the Rangers players as the R's celebrated their second goal."

"The club will continue to review video footage and liaise with the Metropolitan and West Midlands police."

A Birmingham City FC spokesman said: "If anybody is found to have thrown a coin, we will take the strongest possible action. As a club, we utterly condemn that sort of behaviour."

"We will be liaising with the relevant bodies, including West Midlands Police, to investigate such allegations."

A Hoops fan was also treated for a broken nose in the aftermath of the game, but it was reported that one supporter from the home end was able to encroach onto the playing surface unimpeded and confront Blues fans.

A statement from the police read: "From around 2.30pm on Saturday, February 27, a large number of Birmingham supporters caused a disturbance in Ellerslie Road near to Loftus Road Stadium."

"Cordons were put in place to assist police officers in ensuring public safety. In addition, officers used batons to restore order where the behaviour of supporters was violent and potentially dangerous."

■ SPOT ON: Junior Hoilett's penalty clinched a comfortable win

Beware 'combustible' Conte

CURRENT Italy manager Antonio Conte is the man set to replace Guus Hiddink as Chelsea boss at the end of this season.

It's believed that the controversial manager, who led Juventus to three consecutive Scudetti titles after years in the doldrums before taking up his role with the national side in 2014, has accepted a three-year deal and will officially take over the helm at Stamford Bridge once Italy's Euro 2016 campaign is over.

But the 46-year-old is no shrinking violet. If Jose Mourinho is viewed as a combustible character, then Conte will certainly fan the flames in what looks set to be another volatile period in Chelsea's history.

Court case

However, there is still the prospect of a court case hanging over Conte's head for possible sport fraud.

And let's not forget that he was handed a 10-month ban – reduced to four – over allegations of failing to report a match-fixing attempt during his time as manager of Siena.

Conte has always protested his innocence.

There are numerous suggestions that his team-talks when things are not going well make Sir Alex Ferguson's legendary in-your-face 'hair-drying' rants at players look like nursery rhyme renditions.

■ CHELSEA could launch a bid for Crystal Palace's highly-rated centre-back Scott Dann if they decide to give up on long-term target John Stones of Everton.

Manchester City are keen on the 21-year-old, too, so a swift move for Dann, 29, could ease Blues' central defensive problems if, as expected, John Terry leaves Stamford Bridge for pastures new in the summer.

■ BLUES' under-18s have reached their seventh FA Youth Cup semi-final in a row after overcoming a stubborn Reading, 2-1, at Stamford Bridge last Friday.

Ex-Pimlico Academy schoolboy Tammy Abraham and Jay Dasilva scored the goals to set up a two-legged semi-final against Blackburn Rovers.

Dates have yet to be arranged but the first leg will be at Ewood Park.

Late card adds insult to injury

■ FULHAM from back page

Hammersmith end saw Fulham fall behind and unable to recover despite creating numerous chances.

"It is true that we created many chances," Jovanović said. "We could have scored some goals but we showed many weaknesses in our defence. They punished us right at the very beginning of the game."

"We gifted them with many presents. We need to be more solid with a more positive mentality in order to compete."

"We prepare for a very long game and we aim not to give them very many chances. With the first touch in our half they scored their goal."

"We then had a period with an injured player (Ryan Fredericks) and we gave away a penalty. At that stage we are down two goals."

"Then it's not easy against a team like Middlesbrough to recover. We tried, we made chances but we did not play a particularly good game."

"We were unable to score the goal to make it difficult for them at the end and they deserve these three points."

Some fans questioned why Fredericks, who was virtually a pedestrian in the build-up to Boro's second goal, was still on the field having suffered a heavy fall on his back which clearly troubled him.

Moussa Dembele replaced him soon after the penalty and was unlucky to see an overhead kick touched over the bar. The fact that the striker, who has 10 goals to his name this season, began the game on the bench was another cause for raised eyebrows when a somewhat defensive Fulham team was announced to the crowd.

Maybe Jovanović has decided that with Dembele almost certain to be leaving Fulham in the summer, he will use the remaining months of this campaign as a period for experimentation.

It will also be interesting to see if he keeps faith with his favoured back three formation, which has so far produced mixed results.

Defeat by the side now lying third in the second tier saw Whites slip to 20th place. To add insult to injury, a late red card was awarded to Richard Stearman, who had been recalled in place of the suspended Fernando Amorebieta after he had been sent off in the 1-1 midweek draw at Leeds United.

Not that the head coach was looking for any excuses. "It has been from last year that we have been inconsistent," he continued. "It is very important for us to remain positive, believe in ourselves and push very hard to do our jobs."

"We have to move forward in this way and we have an obligation to fight to the very last moment."

Fulham visit Reading on Saturday bidding to complete a league double over the Royals, who were thumped 4-2 at The Cottage last October. Back in SW6, Whites face another tough examination next Tuesday when current leaders Burnley are in town.

Ivanovic is new head boy

CHELSEA match-winner Branislav Ivanovic and Gary Cahill are likely to retain their central defensive partnership for Saturday's home Premier League game against Stoke City while John Terry continues his battle to regain full fitness.

With crucial matches the following week, starting with a Champions League second leg at The Bridge against Paris Saint-Germain on Wednesday and a tricky FA Cup tie at Everton three days later, manager Guus Hiddink is weighing up the prospect of keeping Terry out of the side to keep him fresh for the vital cup matches, the only trophies left to fight for this season.

The skipper is fighting a twin battle to overcome a hamstring problem and prove to Roman Abramovich that he deserves another contract after his current deal expires at the end of June. Terry himself has revealed that the club have yet to offer him a new one and feels sure they won't.

Even if fit, it appears that Hiddink is reluctant to reinstate Terry to his centre-back berth, because Cahill and Ivanovic are proving themselves more than capable replacements for him and the injured Kurt Zouma, whose season has already been curtailed by an anterior cruciate ligament injury.

Despite 'return to training last week, Hiddink has said that it was the 35-year-old who decided he wasn't ready to play in the 2-1 win at Southampton on Saturday.

Not ready

"We looked at him and asked him how he was feeling. He said, 'I feel OK but not ready to play'," confirmed Hiddink.

LWN Sport went to press before tonight's league clash at Norwich City, although Hiddink revealed that Terry would be an unlikely starter.

"I have experience in the past with these kinds of injuries," said Hiddink. "When someone thinks 'Ah, I'm OK' but the demands of the game are a little bit different. Then I prefer to wait, especially in relation to the games coming up (PSG and Everton)."

But surely Terry is chomping at the bit to prove himself worthy of a new contract?

"Yeah, but I talked to him and I said, 'let's take our time, not to rush things.' It's nothing to do with the contractual situation," said the interim manager.

Terry injured his hamstring and tendons in the 5-1 thumping of Newcastle United two weeks ago and Hiddink is not surprised it has taken so long for the defender to recover.

"For hamstring and tendon injuries, it depends on the grade of the seriousness of the injury. But normally it is longer than, say, an ankle injury, and I have the experience to wait even longer than everyone thinks."

That comment hints that Hiddink will keep Terry out of the frame on Saturday against Stoke. Will Terry need a league game under his belt before he is ready to face PSG?

"We will see how he reacts and if he needs a game,

This week at STAMFORD BRIDGE

we might organise an intense game – not a 11 v 11 but maybe six v six, with intensity, at Cobham, but it will be very tight (for him to be ready)."

While Terry is out of action vice-captain Ivanovic is revelling in the responsibility of leading the side.

Ivanovic popped up in the 89th minute at St Mary's Stadium to head home the winner after Cesc Fabregas had levelled Shane Long's first-half strike with 15 minutes left. Hiddink was not surprised.

"It is part of his job and he is doing it very well," he said. "We execute the corners in training every week. But training is different to a real game. He has done it many times."

"Firstly, he is a very courageous character. Secondly, you have to be equipped in the timing and execution, which he is perfect at doing."

"He is not a big shouter but he is good at the short commands and that is what I like very much as a manager, because what we do in training and discuss in team meetings I want the key players to do in matches."

Dressing room leaders

So without a Frank Lampard, Petr Cech and Didier Drogba, all now plying their trade away from Stamford Bridge, are there enough leaders in the squad? Unsurprisingly, Hiddink thinks so.

"Yes, that is why I am happy," he said. "Players like Cesc Fabregas are doing that job too. So it's good to see some players step up. Not just in their personal performance but in their organisation tactically."

"Azpi (Cesar Azpilicueta) does a lot of shouting and 'coaching'," he said. "Diego (Costa), in his way, does some coaching. But I also like Oscar and Willian, who are gifted by nature and also take command in this team."

After registering their first back-to-back Premier League wins of the season, Blues are 11th in the table, well outside the top four needed for Champions League qualification. But on the other hand, they are also now a long distance away from relegation, a looming prospect under Jose Mourinho's tutelage. Did the players simply stop playing for the former manager, Hiddink was asked?

"Of course they were disappointed about (the first) half of the season," he said.

"And the crowd were fully right to react in the first two/three games (after Mourinho's sacking). I am convinced that the team had to react. We talked about that. The team is key to reacting. They must try to get the support of the crowd again."

"You can't ask the crowd, 'please don't think about what happened in the bad results' – the team must show the desire to play. Then the crowd will start supporting again, and against Southampton they were tremendous in their support."

Focus on Craven Cottage

By TONY McDONALD

McCormack shoots for top

FULHAM striker Ross McCormack admits he is aiming for the top of the league goal scoring charts.

Although McCormack says he had set himself no personal goals target for this season, the fact that he is just four goals behind the Championship's leading scorer, Andre Gray of Burnley, is driving him on.

"The most important thing is for the club to remain in this division," says McCormack, who is now the second highest scorer on 16 goals (eight at home and eight away), along with Hull City's Abel Hernandez, while Brentford's Alan Judge is next on 14.

"I'm counting (the goals) and now that I'm right up there among the leaders, it's definitely my ambition to be top scorer in this division, like I was at Leeds. Whether I can do that remains to be seen but I'm confident."

McCormack has netted 18 times (including two in the Capital One Cup) in 36 appearances for Whites in all competitions this season and has led the side in the absence of regular captain Scott Parker.

Last week the 29-year-old Scotland international was rewarded with a new contract and will now remain at Craven Cottage until the summer of 2020.

He moved to SW6 from Leeds United in 2014 and hit 19 goals for Fulham in all competitions last season.

In an interview for Fulham's website (www.fulhamfc.com), McCormack said: "Having spoken to the owner and the manager recently, I think there is going to be a change in the club in the summer."

"You can already see over the last four or five games – if you take away the Blackburn game, when we were poor – the manager is starting to mould a style of play into us."

Responding positively

"All the lads are pulling in the same direction, which maybe hasn't been the case for a while since I've been at the club. There is a lot of work to do but it's going to be interesting."

McCormack says the players are responding positively to new manager Slaviša Jokanović.

"The intensity level in training has definitely gone up since he came in. There seems to be more of a method to what he's doing. He knows how to tailor sessions. It's all to do with the ball, little small-sided games and possession – things that are going to benefit us."

"A side that you probably don't see to him is that he is pretty witty and the lads are definitely onside with him."

"The last 18 months have not really been acceptable to a club like Fulham that has been in the Premier League for so long."

"As a footballer, if I'm not playing in the Premier League, then I want to be in a position where you are fighting to get to the Premier League. Given all the chats I've had with the owner and the manager, and even the boys in the dressing room, everyone is as one and desperate to be in a position to do that."

McCormack is spot on when he says Fulham need to find a consistency that continues to elude them. Whites haven't recorded back-to-back league victories since last October and Saturday's 2-0 home defeat by high-flying Middlesbrough proved another setback.
